P R E F A C E.

THE excellence of the Roads through every part of Great Britain has, within a few years, rendered the Traveller an easy task; and the publication of so many Tours has contributed to extend our local knowledge, not only by describing the situation of places, and their distances from each other, but by pointing out whatever is worthy of observation, either in Nature or in Art.

There yet, however, seemed to be wanting a Compendium of Topography; an Itinerary, comprehending as well what is amusing and instructive, as what is necessary and useful.

The names of Cities, Towns, and principal Seats, together with the respective distances from each, have been often presented to the Public; but the design of the present compilation is to convey, in a concise manner, some knowledge of the ancient and present state of particular places through which the Traveller passes, without entering into dry details or tedious digressions.

Besides the result of his own observations, the Compiler has referred to the Works of several popular Writers, from which many passages have been extracted, which might contribute, within such narrow limits, to illustrate the Topography, or to interest the Traveller:

PREFACE.

Those who travel upon business, who make periodical visits to watering-places, ramble into Wales, visit the Lakes, or traverse the less cultivated tracts of the North, will find their time agreeably beguiled, by making this little Volume the companion of their Travels.

IN this edition, the reader will remark a variety of additions and improvements. In every Route, it will be observed, that the distances are marked both to and from every place—as, in page 95, the distances of each place from London to Port-Patrick, and from Port-Patrick to London are given; that the Traveller may find a ready account of the distances, from whatever point his journey may commence.

The communication between Great Britain and Ireland, particularly since the union of the two kingdoms, is become so frequent, that an account of the great Roads of Ireland, which is inserted in this edition, will render it yet more useful and complete. The Routes to Paris, the Table of the Times of High Water, and a copious Index of Places and Seats, will contribute to the further information and amusement of the Traveller.

July, 1803.

It is commonly called the "Round House," from its octagon form.	28 $\frac{3}{4}$	* CHELMSFORD 94 $\frac{1}{4}$ a handsome town between the rivers Chelmer and Can. It was once famous for a small monastery, built by Malcolm king of Scotland. In the year 1100, Maurice bishop of London (as lord of the manor) built a bridge of three arches over the Can, which brought the great road through this town, which before went through Writtle. This ancient bridge was lately taken down, and an elegant stone bridge of one arch erected in its place. The entrance into the town is narrow and ill-built; but on crossing the bridge, a spacious well-built street, with a magnificent new shire-house, fronted with Portland stone, presents itself. Near to this is the parish church, an ancient and handsome Gothic structure, and a new conduit, which affords a plentiful supply of good water; the elegant figures upon which are from Coade's artificial stone manufactory. Here is a small theatre; and a free-school founded by king Edward VI. The county gaol, a large and handsome new stone edifice, stands in Moulsham, near the bridge, and has two fronts of Portland
23	INGATESTONE 100 In this parish is Writtle-park, the ancient seat of lord Petre, to whose ancestor, sir William Petre, this manor was granted at the dissolution. Part of the house is pulled down, and the rest is inhabited by the steward, and other Roman-catholic servants of his lordship. In the church of this town there are some stately monuments of the

D. R. stone. It is built according to the plan of Mr. Howard. On entering the town, the great road divides; that to Yarmouth, through Colchester, to the right; and that to Sudbury and Norwich proceeding through the main street. This town has a considerable market on Friday, for corn, cattle, and provisions; and in 1793, an act of parliament was obtained, to make the Chelmer navigable from hence to Malden. Black Boy.—Saracen's Head.

30 SPRINGFIELD..... 93
On the l. is Springfield-place. — Brograve, esq. and on the r. is Springfield Lyons, dowager lady Waltham: it is situated on a fine eminence.

51 * COLCHESTER..... 72
a large borough, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It is a place of great antiquity, seated upon an eminence, on the river Coln, which is navigable within a mile of the town. The town was formerly surrounded by a wall, which had six gates and three posterns; but they are now demolished. It had sixteen parish churches, of which only twelve are now in use; and many of them were much damaged in 1648, when the town surrendered to the army of the parliament, after a remarkable siege, in which the inhabitants suffered all the extremities of famine. There is a large manufactory of bays, and it is famous for oysters. The castle is very ancient, in which, it is said, the emperor Constantine was born; it is now much dilapidated. Within the castle is a library, which was established in 1631, by Dr. Harsnett, archbishop of York; to which several additions have been since made. Colchester is supposed to have been the ancient Camulodunum, and Roman urns, vases, and tiles, are frequently dug up; sometimes also coins and medals, rings, chains, and other relics of antiquity. In this town there are two charity schools and two free grammar schools. It contains many good houses, and the streets are, in general, spacious. It is governed by a mayor and aldermen, and returns two members to parliament. Its population in 1801 amounted, as returned to parliament, to 11,520.		after his death. There is a profile of him, carved in wood, in the front of them. It returns two members of parliament. Here is a seat of the rev. W. Fonereau, and near to it a house of M. Edgar, esq. On the banks of the river, a few miles from this town, is Nacton, the seat of the late admiral Vernon and of Philip B. Broke, esq.; opposite to Nacton, on the other side of the river, is Woolverston, William Berners, esq. White Horse.—Golden Lion.

59	STRATFORD, Suffolk. 64 a small village, where the inhabitants employ themselves in the woollen manufactory.		72 $\frac{1}{4}$ KESGRAVE. 50 $\frac{3}{4}$ G. Thomas, esq.
63	BENTLEY. 60 It was anciently a seat of the Tollemache family, and was also memorable for a monastery founded here by the duke of Norfolk.	76	MARTLESHAM. 47
66	COPDOCK. 57 In this place cross the Orwell. About two miles beyond on the l. is Chantry, — Ford, esq. Here was a remarkable large elm, which being blown down, gave the name to a sign, called the Copdock Elm.	77	* WOODBRIDGE. 46 is seated on the east side of a sandy hill, about six miles from the sea. It has a handsome church. The river Deben is navigable to the town, where ships of a considerable burthen load and unload their goods. A good corn trade is carried on here, and it is famous for refining salt. On the south side of the church is the Priory, Francis Brooke, esq. It was valued, at the dissolution, at 50l. 3s. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per annum. Crown.—Royal Oak.
69	* IPSWICH. 54 a borough town, with markets on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday. It is seated on the river Orwell, and is of great antiquity, formerly called Gippeswic. It was twice pillaged by the Danes. At the time of the conquest, according to Domesday-book, it contained 538 houses. Its population in 1801, as returned to parliament, was 11,177. It has twelve parish churches, and other public buildings. It is governed by bailiffs and portmen. It is populous and well inhabited; but the manufactories, for which it was once famous, are declined. It has a considerable coasting trade, and has lately sent ships to Greenland. It is celebrated for being the birth-place of cardinal Wolsey, who intended to build a college in this town, the foundations of which are yet visible.  Portugal, to the Baltic, and the Mediterranean. It also sends ships to the Greenland fishery. The home fishing for mackerel is carried on in May and June; that for herrings in October and November. Herrings are here salted and dried in wood smoke, and exported to different parts of Europe. It is at present much frequented as a sea-bathing-place. It returns two members to parliament, and is governed by a corporation. The streets are narrow and incommodious. There are two churches; that of St. Nicholas has a lofty spire, which serves as a land-mark from sea; and it is remarkable, that whatever way this steeple is viewed, like that of the church of Chesterfield, in Derbyshire, it appears crooked. This church was built by Herbert, Bishop of Norwich. Its market is on Saturday, which is usually supplied with abundance of provisions. Its population in 1801, when the inhabitants were numbered by an act of parliament, was 14,845.

It sends two members to parliament, and is governed by a mayor and aldermen. Its noble cathedral was founded in 1096, on the removal of the bishop's see from Thetford to this place, by bishop Herbert, who laid the first stone. The choir is spacious, and the steeple strong and high. In this city there are thirty-six parish churches, some of which were formerly covered with thatch. The church of St. Peter Mancroft has a good ring of eight bells, and is esteemed one of the handsomest

D. R. parish churches in England. It has a stately market cross, built of freestone, and a good town-house near the market cross. On a hill, near the cathedral, is a castle, which commands a fine view of the city: it is supposed to have been built in the time of the Saxons, and is now the gaol of the county. The dukes of Norfolk had a palace here, which is now used as a workhouse. Here also are many hospitals and charity schools; and a grammar school, founded by king Edward VI. over which the learned Dr. Parr presided for several years. This city has been long celebrated for its manufactures of crape, and stuffs of various kinds. Near to the city are the ruins of the castle of Kelt, the tanner, by whose rebellion, in the reign of Edward VI. Norwich was reduced to a ruinous state. According to Doomsday-book, Norwich, at the time of the conquest, contained 738 houses. The population, as taken and returned to parliament in 1801, was 36,854. King's Head.—Angel.—White Swan.—Maid's Head.

"My lord," said the king, "I have heard much of your hospitality, but the truth far exceeds the report. These men so well dressed on both sides of me are, no doubt, your menial servants?" The earl smiled, and confessed that his fortune was too small for such magnificence. "They are most of them," added he, "my retainers, who are come to do me service at this time when they know I am honoured with your highness's presence." The king startled, and said, "By my faith, my lord, I thank you for your good cheer, but I must not allow my laws to be broken in my sight: my attorney must speak to you." In this parish is a spring which he mentions in the latter work, as a proof that springs have their origin from the sea, and not from rain and vapours. This spring, in the driest seasons, was little diminished, after an observation of more than twenty years, although other streams and an adjoining brook had been dry for months together. Upminster-hall was granted by king Harold to the abbey of Waltham-cross, and was anciently the hunting-seat of the abbots. It is partly ancient and partly modern. In the house is a deep well, over which is an ancient brick tower, the upper part of which serves as a dairy. In this parish is Mount-Pleasant, another house of Mr. Townsend. The church is seated on an eminence; over the porch of which is an apartment, where the parish business was formerly transacted. It was inhabited by Elizabeth Flemming, an alms-woman, who had lived in it more than sixty years, and, according to her own account, passed her hundredth year on March 17, 1790. At the end of Page-green stands a remarkable circular clump of elms, called "the seven sisters." In a brickfield on the west side of the road is St. Loy's well, which is said to be always full, and never to run over; and in a field opposite the vicarage-house rises a spring, called "bishop's well," of which the com-		8½ PONDER'S END..... 89½ On the n. is Durance, S. At the Restoration it was again laid open, woods were planted, and the chase was again stocked with deer; but, by an act of parliament, in 1779, it was disforested. In April, 1557, the princess Elizabeth was escorted from Hatfield to Enfield chase, by a splendid retinue, that her grace might hunt the hart . Only a small part of this building is standing. The house contains an excellent collection of pictures by the best masters. In this place, Richard Cromwell, the protector, spent many years of a venerable old age. He assumed the name of Clark, and first resided here in 1680, in a house near the church; and here died in 1712, in his 86th year, in so good and healthy a state, that, at fourscore, he would gallop his horse for many miles together.

He patronised John Gerard, the celebrated botanist; and the garden contained the best collection of plants of any nobleman of his time. Queen Elizabeth was often entertained here, prolonging her visit to a month or six weeks at a time. He gave this seat to his younger son, sir Robert Cecil, afterwards earl of Salisbury, who exchanged it for Hatfield, which was the property of the crown. It afterwards reverted to the crown, and king William gave it to William Bentick earl of Portland, from whom it descended to the present duke, who sold it. It contains twelve colleges and four halls, which have equal privileges with the colleges. The colleges are, Peter-house, Corpus Christi or Bennet, King's, Queen's, Jesus, Christ's, St. John's, Magdalen, Caius, Trinity, Emanuel, and Sidney Sussex. The halls are, Clare, Pembroke, Trinity, and Catharine. Of the colleges, Peter-house is the most ancient, being founded in 1257, and King's and Trinity the most considerable. King's college is the noblest foundation in Europe; and the chapel one of the finest pieces of Gothic architecture in the world. The library, chapel, &c. of Trinity-college, are worthy observation. The other structures belonging to the university are the senate-house, a fine edifice, which with St. Mary's church, the schools, the university library, and other buildings, form a noble square. Here is a botanical garden, and a general hospital, called Addenbroke's, from the name of the founder. A new college is now erecting, 1803, called Downing-college, from estates left for that purpose many years ago. This university is said to have been founded by Sigebert, king of the East Angles. In the reign of king Stephen there was a castle in the midst of the town, the foundation of which is yet visible. There is said to have been a mint here in 930. In the reign of Richard, the inhabitants murdered all the Jews here. Here the barons met to levy war against king John; in whose reign here was the first bull-baiting. In this town are the remains of two colleges, called Black-hall and Brazen-nose, on the gate of which last there is a brazen nose, and a ring through it, from which the college at Oxford took pattern. It had once fourteen parish churches, seven of which now remain; in St. Martins, Cecil lord Burleigh was buried in a handsome tomb. It is governed by a corporation, and sends two members to parliament. In the church near the bridge is a fine monument of the earl and countess of Exeter in white marble, with their figures cumbent, as big as the life, done at Rome. It is a large, populous, and handsome town. Its chief trade is in malt, sea-coal, and free stone. There were formerly several religious houses in this town. A mile on the r. is Burleigh-house, the magnificent seat of the marquis of Exeter, formerly the residence of lord Burleigh, treasurer to queen Elizabeth. Here is a large church with a stone spire, one of the loftiest in England, 288 feet high; which, by the deception of the sight, seems to stand awry. In a large ornamental building belonging to the church, is a great collection of bones, bleached white by the air, curiously piled up, and arranged in order. Here were formerly many religious houses, ruins of some of which still remain. In one of these near the market-place is a little chapel, adorned with imagery. Here are the remains of a Roman highway; and at the end of the town a remarkable old column, called a cross, with a Norman inscription on it. The antiquity of this place appears from the Itinerary of Antoninus, which says, that the Crispinian horse were stationed here while the Romans were in Britain. In the time of king Stephen, its cathedral, with several religious houses, was burnt down by an accidental fire, and was not begun to be rebuilt till 1227, and was finished in 1426, being two hundred years in completing; and such care was taken in the erection of it, that it seems to be one entire edifice, though composed of five different styles of architecture. The choir is remarkable for its fine carving. The east window was glazed in 1405, and is exquisitely painted. A library was given to this church, in the last century, by the widow of archbishop Matthews. In the reign of Richard I. here was a horrid massacre of the Jews. Henry III. had two interviews here with Alexander II. king of Scotland. A treaty of peace was afterwards concluded between them; and his son, Alexander III. was here married to king Henry's daughter, lady Margaret; at which wedding there was a grand feast. Parliaments were held here in the reigns of Edwards I. and II. and by command of the latter, their acts here were first called statutes. It was in later times visited by the kings, and was frequently the residence of nobles. Near the minster is a house formerly the archbishop's palace, now converted into a play-house. Its members may claim a seat in the house of commons next to the citizens of London. It has a strong stone bridge over the Ouse, much admired for its architecture. Upon this bridge are the great council-chamber, the courts of record, exchequer, &c. so that it resembles a street. Vessels of

R. R. D. R. R. R. 70 tons are navigable to this city. There are many public buildings and churches, worthy the observation of the curious traveller; and many remains are still to be seen of the ingenuity and grandeur of the old Romans, besides the ruins of abbeys, castles, and churches, of a later date. Among others is an arch at Micklegate-bar, and a multangular tower, and wall, near the mint-yard, built in the times of Severus and Constantine. In the register and prerogative office are ecclesiastical records ninety-three years older than any at Lambeth or Canterbury. A curious piece of antiquity is to be seen in the minster; it is a famous drinking-horn, though made of an elephant's tooth, belonging to Ulphus, who foreseeing that after his death a quarrel would happen about his estate, among his children, came to this city with this horn, and filling it with wine, kneeling before the altar, bestowed all his lands upon God and St. Peter. Camden gives a particular account of it. According to the return of the population made to parliament in 1801, the number of inhabitants was 16,145. Tavern. — Ring Roses. — George. — Black Swan, &c.

stands at the end of the Picts' Wall, on the north side of the Tyne. It is admitted to have been a Roman station, though no evidence at present appears, except at Pandon-gate, the superstructure of which is of different workmanship from any other building in the town, the arches being circular. The carpenter's tower is also of Roman original. In the time of the Saxons it was called Moncaster, from the monks, who fled from hence when it was laid waste by the Danes; it was afterwards called Newcastle, from a castle built here by William the Conqueror's son, Robert, in 1080, to defend the country against the Scots, whose kings possessed, and sometimes resided in, this town before the Norman conquest. Several monasteries were also built here soon after the castle; and it was greatly enriched by a good trade to Germany, and by the sale of its coal to other parts of England, and it has become the emporium of the north of England. In the reign of Edward I. it was burnt by the Scots. The

D. R. inhabitants afterwards fortified the town, and encompassed it with stout walls, which extend two miles. Henry VII. built a monastery here for the Franciscans; and it had several other religious structures. It is governed by a mayor and aldermen, and returns two members to parliament. The castle overlooks the town; part of which is much defaced, but what remains is a sufficient proof of its former strength. Here is a magnificent exchange and a custom-house, and one of the finest quays in England. In this town there are many churches and public buildings worthy the attention of the traveller. The old bridge being carried away by a flood, the present one was erected in 1775. It was originally built of wood; but, having been destroyed by fire in 1248, was rebuilt with stone. The town is very populous, and there are four churches: that of St. Nicholas is a curious fabric, built by David king of Scots, of Gothic architecture. Here are also several hospitals and charity schools. There were anciently several palaces in this town, belonging to the northern nobility. Here also are a library, an infirmary, a theatre, and many meeting-houses. Ships for the coal trade are built here; and there are also in this town considerable manufactories of hardware and broad and narrow cloths, &c. Its population, as taken in 1801, and returned to Parliament, was 36,963. Turk's Head.—Queen's Head, &c.

a large town, with a spacious market-place, governed by a corporation. This place has been particularly fatal to the kings of Scotland. In the reign of king William II. it was besieged by Malcolm II.; and the castle, then the strongest in these parts, 1093, was about to surrender, when a soldier stabbed him with a spear, pretending to deliver him the keys on its point; and his son Edward, on endeavouring to revenge his death, was here slain, and his army routed. It was reduced to ashes in 1215. The castle, now the residence of the duke of Northumberland, whose ancestor's became possessed of it in 1309, from which period it has continued in their possession, seems to have been as fine a palace, as it was a fortress for strength and defence. It has had every embellishment that art can contribute, or wealth obtain. Round the octagon towers are several figures of warriors in the attitude of defence. The town has formerly been walled, the vestiges of which may be traced, and three gates yet remain entire. * EDINBURGH..... 124¹ the capital of Scotland, situated on three hills, which run from east to west. On the middle hill, which is narrow and steep, stands the old town. The north town is seated on an elevated plain, gently sloping on every side. The situation of the old town is peculiar and striking. A fine street, a mile in length, and about ninety feet broad, extends from the castle to Holyrood-house. The ancient castle stands on a high and craggy rock, with a drawbridge on the only side that is accessible. In former times it was deemed impregnable. Here was born James the VIth of Scotland and Ist of England. On the south side of the High-street is the ancient church of St. Giles, a fine Gothic structure, which has four churches under its roof. Near this is a building, in which the Scotch parliament were usually assembled. It is now occupied by the courts of justice. The palace of Holyrood-house forms a grand quadrangle, with a court in the centre, surrounded by piazzas. The north-west towers were built by James V. and the whole was completed in the reign of Charles II. A spacious gallery here is hung with the pictures of 111 monarchs from Fergus I. to James VI. In the north-west tower is shewn the chamber where queen Mary sat at supper, when Rizzio was dragged from her side and murdered; and the private staircase by which Ruthven entered with the assassins, to perpetrate the act. Adjoining are the magnificent ruins of an abbey, founded by David I. in 1128, and converted by Charles II. into a chapel. The communication between the north and south parts is by two noble bridges. Of the university it is sufficient to say, that it is celebrated in all quarters of the world, and its medical school is entitled to the first rank. The city is adorned with elegant squares, streets, and houses, and other of the public buildings are worthy of remark: the register-office; the royal exchange, built in 1753; the physicians'-hall; Heriot's hospital, a beautiful Gothic structure, founded in 1628, for the education of 140 poor boys; Watson's hospital for the sons of decayed merchants; two hospitals for girls; a royal infirmary; and other charitable edifices. The churches and places of public amusement are numerous. The population of the place, including N. and S. Leith, as returned to parliament in 1801, was 82,560. It is supplied with water, conveyed in cast-iron pipes, from Comiston, four miles distant. It is governed by a lord provost, four bailiffs, and a common council, and sends one member to parliament. One mile beyond on the r. is Dean-hall, lord Swinton; and further on the l. W. Keith, esq. In its church-yard are two pillars, said to have been erected in memory of sir Owen Cæsarius, a famous warrior of these parts, who was buried here. He was famous for killing bears, which much infested this country. Hence figures of bears are cut on each side of his grave, in stone. In the market-place is a town-house of wood, adorned with bears climbing up a ragged staff. In 1598, 2266 persons died here of the plague. In 1715 the Scots Highland rebels entered this town, and quartered here one night, in their way to Preston. They halted here also in 1745. The modern church is spacious and handsome, and its

An ancient city, said to have been founded by Luil, a petty king of the county, long before the Romans came into this island. They had a station here, but after their departure it was ruined by the Caledonians, &c. In 680, Egfrid, king of Northumberland, rebuilt and walled it round. It was again so shattered by the Danes and Norwegians, in the eighth and ninth centuries, that it lay in ruins for about 200 years, till William Rufus ordered the wall and castle to be repaired in 1093. Henry I. augmented its fortifications, and made it the see of a bishop. It was often besieged and taken by the Scots. In 1292 it was burnt down. Edward I. held a parliament here. Its walls and castle were repaired by Richard III. Henry VIII. built a strong citadel. It was taken by the rebels in 1745. It is a wealthy, populous place, with well-built houses. There are three gates in the walls, which are a mile in compass, and broad enough for three men to

R. R. D. R. R. R. walk on them abreast. It trades chiefly in fustians. It is governed by a corporation, and sends members to parliament. Its venerable cross has been rebuilt and embellished. It has two parish churches, one of which stands in the body of the cathedral, which is in the middle of the city, inclosed by a wall. The Picts' wall, built by Severus, begins just below this town. The situation of the town is extremely fine: it stands in the midst of extensive and fertile meadows, on a gentle rising ground, terminated by the distant mountains, and watered by the Eden, the Caldew, and the Peteril. Its population in 1801, by the return made to parliament, was 10,221. Bush Coffee-house.

where a leaden coffin was found, in which his body was preserved entire, by a sort of pickle. Coins and other pieces of Roman antiquities, dug up at Old Verulam, are deposited in the vestry. Besides this church there are no remains of this magnificent mitred abbey, except the gateway, a large square building, with a spacious arch beneath. To the south of St. Steven's church are the remains of the church and house of St. Julian, founded for lazars, by Gaufridus, abbot of St. Alban's. In the church of St. Michael are many monuments, particularly that of the great philosopher Bacon, viscount St. Albans, with a Latin inscription by sir Henry Wotton. In the centre of St. Alban's stood one of the magnificent crosses erected by Edward I. in honour of his queen Eleanor. The present "Cross" was erected in 1703. On the river Var is a curious mill, originally built for the purpose of polishing diamonds, but now used as a cotton manufactory. On this river also is Holywell-house, dowager lady Spencer, built by the famous Sarah duchess of Marlborough, who here founded nine alms-houses. The Saxon princes are supposed to have frequently navigated a large pool of water which was at the bottom of the town; several anchors have been found on the spot. Near the town is a Roman fortification, said to have been the camp of Ostorius, the proprætor; the common people call it the Oyster-hills. Mr. Pennant calls it Osterhill, and conjectures it to have been the site of the Saxon palace at Kingsbury. St Alban's is famous for the victory obtained in 1455 over Henry VI. by Richard duke of York. In 1461, a second battle was fought here, in which queen stands on a chalky hill, at the entrance of the Chiltern, where the old Roman Watling-street is crossed by the Ikenild-street. Roman coins have been sometimes found near it. Near it is also an area of nine acres, with a deep ditch and rampart round it, called Maiden-Bower. This town, which was ruined by the Danes, was rebuilt by Henry I. In 1224, a council was held here by the archbishop of Canterbury. Edward I. erected a cross here, in memory of his queen Eleanor. Here several of the Lollards were murdered in the reigns of Henry V. and VII. The church is part of a priory built by Henry I.; and opposite to it is a farm-house, called Kingsbury, once a royal palace. An epitaph in its church mentions a woman here who had nine children born at three several births, and six more at three others. The larks taken in this parish are said to be the largest and best in the kingdom. The women here carry on a great manufacture of hats and baskets of straw. Sugar-loaf.—Bull.—Crown.

Here are also some ancient monuments. The abbey was built in 1145, and its last abbot was hanged at Woburn in March, 1547. Near this place are dug great quantities of Fuller's-earth, useful in the manufactories of cloth. The duke's house is situated in a fine large park, encompassed by a wall. It has many noble rooms in it, particularly a long gallery, furnished with fine pictures. Upon the whole, it is a princely residence, and worthy of its patriotic owner, who (in imitation of the late lamented duke) so laudably employs his time for the benefit of his country in the most extensive pursuits of husbandry. George. — Goat.	380	55 $\frac{1}{2}$	366 $\frac{1}{2}$	STOKE-GOLDINGTON 366 $\frac{1}{2}$ This small village has most beautiful views, enlivened by the Ouse running through rich meadows, and the sight of Oulney church. Its regular spacious market-place is one of the finest in Europe. The streets are clean and well paved, and the houses are built of a red-coloured stone. The church of the holy sepulchre is said to have been built by the knights templars on the model of that at Jerusalem. Its manufactures are shoes, stockings, and lace. On the north side of the river, near Queen's-cross, many Roman coins have been dug up. The county gaol, the infirmary, and some other public buildings, are ornaments to the town.  is seated on the river Soar, the Ratæ of the Romans, and stands on the Roman military highway, called the Fosse, where Roman coins, medals, and other antiquities, have often been discovered. In the Saxon heptarchy, when it was the chief city of the Mercian kingdom, it was the see of a bishop, which being removed after a succession of eight prelates, it fell to decay; but in 914 it was repaired, and fortified with new walls. It afterwards became a wealthy town, and had thirty-two parish churches; but, in the time of Henry II. it was besieged and taken, the castle dismantled, and the walls thrown down. A parliament was held here in the reign of Henry V. in which the first law was made for burning heretics. It is governed by a corporation, and returns two members to parliament. In the High-street there once stood an excellent piece of workmanship, in the form of a cross. Here are now six parishes and five churches, and a hospital that was built here for 100 poor sick men and women, by Henry, the first duke of Lancaster, who was interred in it. It was rebuilt in 1776. Here is also a venerable edifice, built in the reign of Henry VIII. for twenty-four men and women, which has a chapel and a library. Here is a considerable manufacture of stockings. In the neighbouring meadow was that famous monastery, called, from its situation, St. Mary de Pratis, or Prez, since turned into a dwelling-house and garden, where is a pleasant terrace, supported by an embattled wall. Here died cardinal Wolsey. St. Margaret's church is a noble structure. King Richard the Third, who was killed in the battle of Bosworth, was interred in the church called the Grey Friars, suppressed by Henry VIII. which stood near St. Martin's church; and his coffin, which was destroyed in the beginning of the last century, was converted into a trough for horses to drink, at the White Horse inn here. There is an old wall here, called Jewry-wall, where, it is said by the vulgar, that the pagans used to offer up their children to Moloch. It is composed of rag-stone and Roman brick; and near it is a place called Holybones, where have been dug up the bones of many oxen, supposed to have been sacrificed there. The steeple of St. Mary's church was demolished by a storm in 1763, and again in 1783. stands near the river Derwent, which is here broad and beautiful, over which it has a handsome new stone bridge. In the reign of Edward the Confessor it was a royal borough. The Danes had their head-quarters here, but were put to the sword by Ethelfleda, at the head of the Mercians. It was formerly encompassed by a wall, and at the south-east extremity of it there was a castle, of which there is now no vestige but Cow-castle-hill; and a street leading to St. Peter's is, in old deeds, called Castle-gate. All-Saints church, which was once collegiate, is admired for its beautiful gothic tower and elegant ornaments. It had formerly three monasteries. It is governed by a corporation. In an island of the Derwent, in this town, is a large building, where one water-wheel gives motion to about 97,746 movements, for the making thrown silk. This mill was erected in 1734, by sir Thomas Lombe, who brought the plan of it out of Italy, at the hazard of his life. Here is also a porcelaine manufactory, and a pottery of queen's earthenware; and there is a considerable manufacture of fine worsted, cotton, and silk hose. stands near the conflux of Irk and Irwell. It surpasses all other towns in these parts in buildings, trade, and manufactures; has a spacious market-place, and college, also an exchange. The collegiate church, which was built in 1422, is a fine edifice, with a beautiful choir. Here is also an hospital, and a school. Here is an old stone bridge over the Irwell. There are, for three miles above the town, no less than sixty mills upon this river. What is now called Knock-castle was the seat of the Roman Castrum; and the foundations of the castle-wall and ditch still remain in Castlefield. The manufacture of cottons here has been famous 200 years, and vast quantities are annually exported. The population of the place was returned to parliament in 1801, and amounted to 84020. At this place begins the duke of Bridgewater's canal for conveying coals to Manchester. This canal was projected and executed under the direction of Mr. Brindley, and begun in 1759. It was first designed for conveying coals from a mine on the estate of the duke to Manchester, but has since been applied to other useful purposes of inland navigation. Here the duke has cut a basin capable of holding all his boats, and a great body of water, which serves as a reservoir to his navigation. The canal runs through a hill by a subterraneous passage cut through the solid rocks, and in some parts arched with brick. Air-funnels, some of which are thirty-seven yards perpendicular, are cut, at certain distances, through the rock to the top of the hill. The canal is, in some places, raised over public roads, by means of arches, and it passes over the navigable river Irwell, near fifty feet above it. It is a patriotic work, worthy of the noble and ingenious duke who proposed and executed it.

 There is a tradition believed here, having ordered all the doors and of death, she rode through the streets on horseback, naked, with her hair loose about her, which was so long, that it covered all her that nobody looked after her;

vived an annual procession through the town on Friday after Trinity-Sunday, with a figure of a naked woman on horseback. To render this ceremony more absurd and impious, the corporation of the city attend the woman to the church, where a sermon is preached. The woman wears a thin dress fitted to the shape. The city received many privileges from different kings; and Henry VI. made it a county, independent of Warwickshire. Edward the IVth took the sword from the mayor, and disfranchised the city for disloyalty, which the citizens redeemed, upon payment of 500 marks. The king was afterwards reconciled, and kept St. George's feast here, and stood godfather to the mayor's child. After the restoration, the walls, which were three miles in compass, with twenty-six towers, were demolished, and only the gates left standing, which were twelve, and very noble and beautiful. A parliament was held here, in the reign of Henry IV. called the "unlearned parliament," because the lawyers were excluded; and another in the reign of Henry VI. called the "devil's parliament," from the attainders of the duke of York, the earls of Salisbury, Warwick, and March, and their adherents. This was one of the places of confinement of the unfortunate Mary, queen of Scots. It had formerly many religious houses, is large, populous, and ancient. It has three parish churches. At the south end of the town there is a tall spire, the only remains of a church that belonged to a monastery of grey friars. The pulpit of Trinity church is large. St. Michael's has a spire of excellent workmanship, 300 feet high. In the market-place stood the stateliest cross in England, sixty-six feet high, and adorned with the statues of several kings; but it has been taken down. The windows of the town-house are of painted glass, representing some old kings and nobles who had been benefactors to the city. It has a considerable manufacture in stuffs and ribands. Its population, as taken and returned to parliament in 1801, was 16,034. King's Head.—White Bear.

Here are two hospitals, a free grammar-school, three parish churches, a large town-hall, and gaol. At the school, Dr. Johnson, who was a native of this city, was educated; as were also, for a time, Addison, Garrick, bishops Smallridge and Newton, and others, celebrated for their learning and wit. The close was formerly fortified, and resisted the parliament forces for several days. The cathedral was built by Oswy, king of Northumberland, about 300; it was afterwards rebuilt and greatly enlarged in 1296. In the civil wars the spire was destroyed, and it was converted into a stable. After the restoration it was repaired at a great expence, and is now one of the fairest and noblest structures of the kind in England. Its portico is scarcely to be paralleled. The choir is worthy observation, on account of the elegant sculpture about the windows, and the embattled gallery that runs beneath them. The inhabitants are universal merchants, and trade to almost all foreign countries. Ships of any burden may come up with their full lading, and ride before the town, which is open and unfortified. In 1644 it was besieged by prince Rupert, and taken, after a stout resistance. In 1699 a church was built by act of parliament, and the town was made a distinct parish, separate from Walton, to which, before this time, it had only a parochial chapel. The old church was an elegant Gothic structure. There are now many churches, to which the corporation presents. Here are also many places of worship for dissenters of various denominations; a blue-coat hospital; a public infirmary; and an hospital for decayed seamen. The Exchange is a handsome Corinthian edifice. The new buildings are handsome, and the new streets spacious. Some merchants have houses here, which, in Italy, would pass for palaces. There are several public docks, which will contain near a thousand ships with great safety. They are bounded by quays a mile and a half in length, and able to contain 20,000 tons of shipping. About 1360 the town was the property of sir Thomas Latham, who gave it, with other estates, to his daughter, who married sir John Stanley, who rebuilt and fortified it. Its principal trade is to the coast of Guinea for slaves; and much wealth is obtained by this traffic. A traveller will find his time well employed in surveying the buildings and quays of this town. Here is also a good public library. The records of the town state that, in 1565, no more than twelve vessels belonged to this port, the whole of which amounted to no more than 175 tons, and manned by 75 men. The number of ships has always annually increased; so that in 1793, the number had increased to six hundred and six, of 96,694 tons. The town is said to navigate one twelfth part of all the shipping of Great Britain; it has also one fourth part of the foreign trade of Great Britain; one half of the trade of the city of London; and one sixth part of the general commerce of Great Britain. The population in 1801 was returned to parliament, and amounted to 77,653.

	is a large and ancient city, with a noble bridge, having a gate at each end, and twelve arches over the Dee, which falls into the sea. Here are eleven parishes and nine churches. The cathedral, once a monastery, is ancient. Here is also an ancient castle. It is said that both were built by Hugh Lupus, the nephew of William the Conqueror. It is also said that the church was founded by Edgar, who occasionally made this place his residence; where, it is said, having purposed to go by water to the abbey of St. John the Baptist, he obliged eight of his tributary princes to row him in a barge upon the Dee. The city is said to have been founded by the Romans, in whose days it was very eminent. After it had submitted to the Saxons, the Britons recovered and kept it, till Egbert, the first Saxon monarch, took it, about 826.— About 940 it was taken by the Danes. In the thirteenth year of his reign, king Edgar summoned all the kings and princes of the island hither to pay him homage; and the kings of Scots, Cumberland, and Man, and five petty kings of Wales, swore fealty to him, and rowed him in a barge on the river Dee, while he steered the helm. In 1695 a mint was established here. The streets are spacious, and the houses generally of timber. They are built with piazzas before them. The walls were first erected by Ethelfleda, a Mercian lady, in 908, from whence there is a pleasant walk, except where it is interrupted by some of the towers over the gates. The episcopal see was first translated from it to Litchfield, soon after the conquest, and it remained without this dignity, till it was restored by Henry VIII. In the castle, where the earls of Chester formerly held their parliament, is a stately hall, where the palatine court and assizes are held. Here is also a tower, ascribed to Julius Cæsar. A Dutch colony was settled here some years ago, by whose industry the traffic was much augmented; but the most noted manufactures here are of tobacco-pipes. The keeping of the gates of this city was once esteemed so honourable an office, that it was claimed by several noble families: the east-gate, by the earl of Oxford; bridge-gate, by the earl of Shrewsbury; water-gate, by the earl of Derby; and north-gate, by the mayor of the city. On the east side there is a postern, which was shut up by one of its mayors, because his daughter, who had been at an entertainment in Pepper-street, was stolen, and conveyed away through this gate: this has occasioned the proverb, "When the daughter is stolen, shut Pepper-gate." King Ethelwolf, and two other British kings, are said to have been crowned here; and Henry the IVth of Germany died and was buried here, after having lived here as a hermit,

A magnificent castle was built here by the earl of Chester, in the reign of William—the Conqueror, which was destroyed in the reign of king Stephen; but Edward I. ordered it to be rebuilt, and it yet remains one of the most beautiful structures in Wales. On the upper part of the walls are ten towers, and one higher than the others has four beautiful turrets. The walls, in many places, are from twelve to fifteen feet in breadth. The gate of the castle is lofty. The hall is a magnificent room, 100 feet long. All the outside of the castle is yet entire, except one of the towers, which fell into the sea when the rock gave way. The church stands above the harbour, with an old quadrangular fortification, with a bastion at each corner, built about 450. On another mountain stands an old fortification, called Turris Munimentum, which is an old stone wall without mortar, and in its centre is a small turret. There are several remains of old fortifications and druidical antiquities in this neighbourhood, as well as chapels of religious worship. The parish church was built in the reign of Edward the Third, and has an antique porch and steeple. There was an old chapel near the church, now converted to a school-house. A salt-house was erected on an island in the harbour in queen Anne's reign, but it is now in ruins. The passage hence to Ireland is, in general, about twelve hours. A bath and assembly-room were erected here in 1770. Under the mountains that overhang the town is a large cavern in the rock, supported by natural pillars, called the parliament-house, accessible only by boats, and the tide runs into it. Thames and Cherwell, on an eminence. The town is three miles in circumference, and is of a circular form. It consists chiefly of two spacious streets, crossing each other in the middle of the town. The university is said to have been founded by the immortal Alfred, receiving from him many privileges and large revenues. About the middle of the twelfth century public lectures of the civil law were read here, not more than ten years after a copy of Justinian's Institutes had been found in Italy. In the reign of Henry III. there were said to be fifteen thousand scholars. Here are twenty colleges and five halls, several of which are in the streets, and give the city an air of magnificence. The colleges are, University, Baliol, Merton, Exeter, Oriel, Queen's, New, Lincoln, All-Souls, Magdalen, Brazen-Nose, Corpus Christi, Christ-church, Trinity, St. John Baptist's, Jesus, Wadham, Pembroke, Worcester, and Hertford. The halls are Alban, Edmund, St. Mary's, New Inn, and St. Mary Magdalen. The most ancient is University college, founded before the year 872. Queen's college resembles the Luxemburg palace at Paris. Its west wing was destroyed by fire in 1778. New college has a beautiful chapel, with painted glass windows. The cathedral belongs to Christ-church college, which was begun by cardinal Wolsey, and finished by Henry VIII. The most distinguished libraries are those of All-Souls, New college, Christ-church, St. John's, Exeter, Corpus Christi, and the Bodleian. Among other public buildings are the theatre, the Ashmolean museum, the Clarendon printing-house, the Radcliffe infirmary, and a fine observatory. All travellers agree in confessing that there is not such another group of buildings, nor such another university, in the world. Magdalen-bridge is 526 feet long, and of beautiful architecture. At Oxford, king John, compelled by his barons, summoned a parliament to meet in 1258; the proceedings of which were so disorderly, that it was known generally by the name of the "mad parliament." When Henry VIII. suppressed the monasteries, among the new bishoprics which he then erected was that of Oxford. Charles the First assembled a parliament in this city, in 1625, in consequence of the plague then raging in London; and, in 1644, he summoned such of the members of both houses as were devoted to his interests. This city was remarkably attached to that unfortunate king, who here held his court during the whole civil war. It is governed by a mayor and corporation, dependent on the chancellor and vice chancellor of the university. Its population in 1801, was 11,694, according to the return taken and made to parliament. Star. — Cross. — King's Arms. — Angel, &c.

- is a small market town, governed by a corporation. It has a manufacture of gloves and of steel chains for watches, and other articles of

D. R. polished steel. Adjoining on the l. is Blenheim-park, a noble palace of the duke of Marlborough. King Ethelred is said to have called a council here, and Alfred the Great to have translated Boetius De Consolatione Philosophiæ at this place. Here was a magnificent royal palace, which was the favourite retreat of several kings of England, at different periods, till the reign of Charles the First, when, during the civil commotions, it was reduced almost to ruins. It was not, however, entirely demolished, till after the building of Blenheim, when every trace of the ancient edifice was removed, and two elm-trees were planted on its scite. Henry the First beautified this palace; and here resided the beautiful and unfortunate Rosamond, the mistress of Henry the Second, for whom that prince is said to have contrived a labyrinth, by which her romantic retreat (placed by tradition near the spring that still bears her name in Blenheim-park) might communicate with the palace, and prevent any surprise from the jealousy of the queen. Edmund, the second son of Edward I. who was born at this palace, was hence called Edmund of Woodstock; as well as Edward, eldest son of Edward III. commonly known by the name of the Black Prince. Chaucer, the father of English poetry, was born, lived, and died, at Woodstock. The princess, afterwards queen Elizabeth, was confined at Woodstock by her sister, queen Mary, and her life was once in the most imminent danger, from a fire which broke out under the room where she slept. Here is now a fine palace, built in memory of the victory obtained by the duke of Marlborough over the French

In the garden of the manor-house is an antique font, brought from Edward the Confessor's chapel at Islip, in which he received baptism. In Hillwood, near this place, is a Roman encampment in extraordinary preservation, but little noticed. Here is also the ruin of an old parochial cross, containing part of the shaft and base, built of stone. At Easterley, in this parish, was a chapel, of which fragments have been dug up. It is plentifully supplied with coal, by means of a canal to Wednesbury, in Staffordshire. Birmingham goods are dispersed throughout the kingdom, and exported in great quantities to foreign countries, where, in respect to show and cheapness, they are unrivalled: that it is become, to use the emphatical expression of Burke, the toy-shop of Europe. The improved steam-engines made here by Mess. 26	CHALFONT ST. GILES. . 184½ In this village Milton resided, when the plague raged in London in 1665. The house is now standing, and, in all probability, from its appearance, remains nearly in its original state. It was taken for him by Mr. Elwood, the quaker, who had been recommended to Milton as one that would read Latin to him for the benefit of his conversation. Here Elwood first saw a complete copy of "Paradise Lost;" and, having perused it, said to him, "Thou hast said a great deal upon paradise lost, but what hast thou to say to paradise found?" This question first suggested to Milton the idea of writing his "Paradise Regained." On the r. is Newland-park, sir H. Cott; and the Vach, James Grant, esq. This small island is famous for the royal duel fought upon it, between king Edmund Ironside and Canute king of Denmark, to decide the fate of the kingdom, in sight of both their armies; in which the latter being wounded, he proposed an amicable division, and accordingly obtained the north part, the south falling to Edmund. Gloucester is a large and well-inhabited place, has been lately much improved, and its four principal streets are admired for the regularity of their junction in the centre of the town. It contains twelve churches, of which six only are in use, besides the cathedral, which is a handsome structure, remarkable for its large cloister and whispering gallery. Here died, in the year 941, Athelston, after a reign of sixteen years; and here the unfortunate Elgiva, wife of Edwy, was cruelly murdered. The eminent persons buried here were Robert duke of Normandy, eldest son of William the Conqueror, and the unfortunate Edward II. By the Romans it was made one of their colonies; and in the eighth century it was esteemed one of the noblest cities in the kingdom. King Henry the Eighth made it the see of a bishop. Its castle, which was erected by William the Conqueror, is now much decayed. In the chapter-house of the cathedral Strongbow lies, who conquered Ireland. His present Majesty George III. resided here some weeks in the autumn of 1738, for the benefit of the waters. At Southam, near this place, is a seat of the ancient family of Delabere. Half a mile on an eminence is a house of the late lord Fauconberg, in which his majesty resided; near to which is a spring discovered by him, of the same, but stronger, nature as the spa. In the neighbourhood, near Wat-

a small town, whose market is now disused. It was a bishop's see till 1086, when William the Conqueror translated it to Lincoln; and it had five stately churches, though now but one. It likewise appears to have been a Roman station. It gives the title of baron to the family of Carlton. It has a bridge over the Tame, about three quarters of a mile before the junction of that river with the Thames. In the choir of the church are several monuments of its former abbots, an earl of Cornwall, a knight templar: its first bishop and last abbot are among them. There are some ruins of an abbey still existing, and a place, where it is supposed the palace of its bishop stood, called the bishop's court. White Hart.

is a beautiful eminence, rising gradually from the vale of White Horse. Two miles from it is Radcot bridge, of great anti-but more peculiarly interesting from the relation it bears to history. On this spot a memorable battle was fought in 1387, between Robert de Vere, the highly honoured favourite of Richard II.

troops of the favourite were routed,

The weed, called dane-weed, grows every spring about the ruins of the old castle wall, and dies in the autumn. The first time any peer of the realm comes within the precincts of this lordship, he forfeits a shoe from the horse on which he rides, to the lord of the castle and manor, unless he compound for it with money. Several horses' shoes, some gilded, and others of curious workmanship, are nailed on the castle hall-door; some of them stamped with the names of the donors. This custom is derived from the arms of its ancient lords, the Ferrers, which are three horse-shoes, fixed on the gates, and in the hall. On the r. is Burleigh-on-

That elegant species of coal, called cannel, is found in plenty, and great perfection, in this neighbourhood. The Douglas is made navigable to the Ribble, and it is joined by a canal from Liverpool. In this neighbourhood the noble Arthur is said to have routed the Saxons; and it is well known that, in 1650, there was an engagement here, in which the parliament forces were victorious. The earl of Derby was taken prisoner in this battle, and afterwards beheaded. The number of its inhabitants, as returned to parliament in 1801, was 10,989. Near this place are the seats of the earl of Balcarras, T. Doncaster, esq. R. H. Leigh, esq. E. T. Stradish, esq. and J. Hodson, esq. Eagle and Child.

	is a town, seated in a vale, surrounded by hills, near the rapid river Greeta. It was formerly known for its copper-mines, which rendered it a considerable place, but it now consists of one long street only. It is protected from the north winds by the lofty Skiddaw. The vale of Keswick has been lately much visited by the admirers of nature. Here is the lake of Keswick, or, more properly, the lake of Derwent-water. To the north of this romantic piece of water soars the lofty mountain Skiddaw, one of the most distinguished in England, and the haunt of eagles, and other birds of prey. To the south is the dreary region of Borrowdale. The water of the Derwent-water is subject to violent agitations, and often without any apparent cause. It has one peculiar characteristic, that it retains its form, viewed from any point, and never assumes the appearance of a river. Borrowdale abounds, beyond any other part of the world, with the finest sort of that valuable and singular mineral, black lead, or wad, the mines of which are only opened at intervals, and then carefully closed again, lest this precious substance should become too common. Copper, lead, and calamine, are also found in this tract. Derwent-water is three miles in length, and one mile and a half wide. Five islands rise out of this lake, which being covered, either with turf or trees, add greatly to the beauty of the appearance. On one of these islands is an elegant modern house. Skiddaw is one of the most remarkable mountains in the kingdom, being above a thousand yards perpendicular height from the surface of this lake. This

326 $\frac{1}{2}$ * WHITEHAVEN is a seaport town, on the north end of a great hill, washed by the tide of Flood on the west side, where there is a large rock, or quarry of hard white stone, which gives name to the place, and which, with the help of a strong stone wall, secures the harbour. It is lately much improved in its buildings, and noted for its trade in pit-coal and salt, there being near it a prodigious coal-mine, which runs a considerable way under the sea. In 1566 it had but six houses, and one fishing-boat. The effects of trade, industry, and enterprize, have scarcely ever been so strikingly exemplified, as in the rise, progress, and increasing importance of this rich and flourishing town. From an obscure hamlet it has become, within two centuries, of great magnitude. Here the elegant mansion of lord Lowther forms a noble and prominent feature in the view. The popu-

Near it is Windermere, the most extensive lake in England. It is about ten miles in length from north to south, but in no part broader than a mile. It exhibits a greater variety of fine landscapes than any lake in England. Opposite Ecclefrigg-crag it is 222 feet deep. It is famous for its fine char, and abounds also with trout, perch, pike, and eel. It has a communication on the west, with Esthwaite-water, and its principal feeders are the rivers Rothay and Brathay. This lake is frequently intersected by promontories, and spotted with islands; among these the Holme, or Great Island, an oblong tract of thirty acres, crosses the lake in an oblique line, surrounded by a number of inferior isles, finely formed and wooded: they make together a kind of archipelago. Not a bulrush, nor swampy reed, defiles the margin of this lake. In navigating it upward, from the Great Island, the extremity appears singularly noble, its parts neat and picturesque; and the view of the surrounding mountains, from Cove to Kirkston, is astonishing. At the upper corner of this lake are the ruins of a fort, supposed to have been Roman. In laying the foundation of a curious edifice, built on the scite of Holme-house, in 1774, discoveries were made of very old foundations, pavements, and gravel walks. At the head of Windermere is Croft-Lodge,

It is a large, populous, and handsome town, distinguished by its spacious market-place, and noted as one of the principal seats of the stocking manufacture, particularly of the finer kinds, as those of silk and cotton. It has also a manufactory of coarse earthen-ware. It has three parish churches, and meeting-houses for dissenters of various denominations. It is remarkable for its vaults, or cellars, cut into the rock. The streets are well paved, and always clean. Heavy goods are brought hither from London by sea, and thence up the river Trent. It had a castle, supposed to have been built by William the Conqueror, or rather by his natural son, William Peverell. It often gave entertainment and residence to the monarchs of England. In 1179 the kings of England and Scotland kept their Christmas here. King Richard I. held a great council here, after having taken it by siege from his brother, earl John, who got possession of the castle while he was in the Holy Land. Two great councils were held here in the reign of Edward III. and two more by Richard II. At this town Charles I. set up his standard at the commencement of the civil war, which terminated in the destruction of himself and of the constitution. Here are the remains of several monastic buildings. The castle is now the property of the duke of Newcastle, and is a modern edifice. The return of the population to parliament, in 1801, was 28,861.

195 $\frac{1}{4}$ * LEEDS is a large town, situated in a vale, which trade has rendered one of the most populous spots in England, and is the principal of the clothing towns in Yorkshire. It is particularly the mart for the coloured and white broad cloths, of which vast quantities are sold in its cloth-halls; that called the mixed cloth-hall is a building of amazing extent, in which the cloth is placed on benches, for sale, every market day, and the whole business is transacted within the space of an hour, without the least confusion. The white cloth-hall is a similar building. The manufactures that supply these two halls extend about ten miles to the south, fifteen to the south-west, and eight to the north and west, the mixed cloths being mostly made in the neighbourhood of the river Aire, and the white cloths in that of the Calder. Leeds has a manufactory of camlets, which has declined, and a flourishing one of carpets, resembling those of Wilton and Scotland. Here are also some mills for the cutting of tobacco, and a great pottery. Within three miles of the town are numerous collieries. Here is a house, called Red-hall, because it was the first brick building in the town, and king Charles I. had an apartment in it. It was a neat strong building in the time of Camden; but it was ruined in the civil wars: it covered near an acre of ground. It has nine dependent constabularies, in which are many antiquities. The river Wherse, which runs under a costly stone bridge of eleven arches, runs in a bed of stone, and looks as clear as rock water. Near it is now Harewood-house, lord Harewood, one of the first houses in the county for elegance and superior embellishments. It has a church as magnificent as a cathedral, adorned with three lofty spires. Here was once a pompous monastery, built by Wintred archbishop of York, which was afterwards turned into a college. The church, which was made a sanctuary by king Athelstan, still retains collegiate privileges. Some of the archbishops of York used to reside in its monastery. This town was plundered by the Scots in 1318. A treaty was made here in the reign of Charles I. between his commissioners and the Scots. Many Saxon coins were found here in 1695. The market-place is reckoned the finest square of the kind in England, and is adorned with a curious obelisk. Within two miles on the r. is J. Elliott, esq. Near this place, in 1463, was fought a bloody battle, between the houses of York and Lancaster, in which the latter was defeated. It was formerly famous for an abbey and church, one of which is now decayed, and a great part of the other was pulled down by the Scots. It was once the see of a bishop, but the diocese was so harassed and ruined by the Danes, that no man would accept of the bishopric, and it was, therefore, united to Lindisfarne in 883. - 286 TYNEMOUTH is a seaport, seated at the mouth of the river Tyne.
 It has a castle, situated on a very high rock, inaccessible on the sea side, and well mounted with cannon. There is a bar across the mouth of the river, which is not above seven feet deep at low water.
 There are dangerous rocks about it, called the Black Middings; but, to guide the ships by night, there are light-houses set up, and maintained by the Trinity-house. Here ships take in their loading of coal and other things, which are brought from Newcastle. This place is resorted to, as a watering-place, during the summer months. In the castle was a monastery (the ruins of which are still to be seen), which was often plundered by the Danes. Its present appearance is strikingly noble, and incloses an area of about six acres. The view is crowded with august ruins, of which many fine arches are standing; as is the gateway tower, and the eastern part of the church, of most exquisite workmanship. The western gate is still entire. *Star

 235 * SCARBOROUGH is a large borough, seated on a steep rock, near which are such craggy cliffs, that it is almost inaccessible on every side. On the top of this rock is a large green plain, with a little well of fresh water springing out of the rock. It is greatly frequented on account of its mineral waters, called the Scarborough spa, and also for sea bathing; on which account it is much improved in the number and beauty of its buildings. The spring was under the cliff, part of which fell down in December, 1737, and the water was lost; but in clearing away the ruins, in order to rebuild the wharf, it was recovered, to the great joy of the town. Here are assemblies and balls, in the same manner as at Tunbridge. It has a good harbour, possesses a considerable shipping trade, and is much engaged in the fisheries. On the rock, king Henry II. erected a noble castle, now in ruins, into which Edward II. put his minion, Piers Gaveston, to secure him from the resentment of the nobility, whom he had insulted: but they forced it to surren-

The cathedral was formerly a monastery, is a majestic structure, full of curious work, and has a large choir. It was founded in 655, to which the abbot of Croyland and his monks flying for protection in the year 870, they were overtaken, and murdered in a court of this monastery, called the monk's church-yard, because they were all there buried. To this day is to be seen the tomb-stone, with their effigies, which was erected over their common grave. It was converted into a bishop's see by Henry VIII. John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, lived here in great splendour. Upon the hill, in the castle, are the ruins of the bishop's palace, and other ruins of ancient grandeur and magnificence. David king of Scots met king John here, and performed homage to him on a hill without the city, in the presence of the principal nobility. King Henry VII. kept his court here at Easter, in 1486. The chief trade is now in coals, brought by the Trent and Fossdike, and in oats and wool, which are sent by the river Witham: Here is a small manufacture of camblets. The cathedral is much admired for its interior architecture, which is in the richest and lightest Gothic style. The great bell, called Tom of Lincoln, requires fifteen able men to ring it. 	is seated on the north side of the river Humber, and is a handsome, large town, with two parish churches. It is fortified, and is the first town that shut its gates against Charles the First: but its fortifications are now inconsiderable, while its commerce is increased so much, that it is, perhaps, the fourth port in the kingdom. Its situation is extremely advantageous: for, besides its communication with the Yorkshire rivers and canals, it has access by the Humber to the Trent, and its branches. The foreign trade is chiefly to the Baltic, but it has also regular traffic with the southern parts of Europe, and with America. More ships are sent hence to Greenland than from any other port, except London. The coasting trade is very considerable. Among the public buildings are the Trinity-house, for the relief of seamen and their widows, and an exchange. The stone bridge over the river to Holderness was rebuilt in 1787.  12¼ * WALTHAM-ABBEY, Essex, obtained its name from a magnificent abbey, founded here in honour of the neighbouring cross, by the unfortunate king Harold. The cross was supposed to have been miraculously conveyed here from some distant spot. Some fragments of this abbey still remain. Harold and his two brothers, after the battle of Hastings, were interred at the east end of the ancient church, at the distance of forty yards from the present structure. A plain stone is said to have been laid over him, with this inscription, "Haroldus infelix;" and a stone coffin, said to have been his, was discovered in the reign of queen Elizabeth; the bones, upon the touch, mouldered into dust. Within the precincts of this abbey is still a tulip-tree, said to be one of the largest in England. Here are some gunpowder-mills, and some manufactories of printed linens and pins.

To HERTFORD.

To HOWDESDON, see p. 44.
 21 * HERTFORD, in the beginning of the heptarchy, was considered as one of the principal cities of the East Saxons. It is seated on the river Lea, which is now navigable for barges, but, at that period, was equally navigable for ships to this town. In 879 the Danes erected two forts here, for the security of their ships; but Alfred turned the course of the river, so that their vessels were left on dry ground. Edward, the eldest son of Alfred, built a castle here, which has been often a royal residence. It is still entire, and the habitation of a private family. Here were formerly five churches, but now only two.

At the time of the Conquest, according to Doomsday-book, it contained 148 houses. Near this town are many handsome villas, as Bayford-bury, W. Baker, esq.; Cole green, earl Cowper; Jennings-bury, M. Byam, esq.; and Balls, lord John Townsend. Bell. — Half-moon — Falcon.

Barges only can come up its river, large vessels stopping six miles below. Here William the Conqueror erected a castle, to prevent incursions from the outlaws of Ely. In 1256, the lands and people in the neighbourhood were drowned by a tempestuous inundation from the sea; but cardinal Moreton, bishop of Ely, rebuilt the castle of brick; secretary Thurloe rebuilt the castle, which, at the restoration, returned to the bishops of Ely, who had a palace here. The trade of this place is rapidly increasing, and the town is constantly in a state of improvement. An elegant stone bridge has been lately erected. The Rose Inn has been a place of public reception from the year 1475, at which period it was known by the sign of the Horn; and on one of the out-buildings, erected in 1601, the figure of a horn is yet to be seen. Rose and Crown.—Vine. was anciently called West Greenwich, is a large town, remarkable for its noble docks, and for the king's yard and store-houses. It has two parish churches, and two hospitals, one of which was incorporated by Henry VIII. and is called Trinity-house of Deptford Strond. The brethren of the Trinity-house hold their corporation by this hospital, and are obliged, at certain times, to meet here for business. These hospitals are for decayed pilots, or masters of ships, or their widows, who have a handsome monthly allowance. Here the royal yachts are generally kept; and near the dock is Say's-court, which was the seat of John Evelyn, esq. the celebrated natural philosopher, and author of "Sylva; or, a Treatise on Forest Trees." In this house the czar Peter the Great resided for some time, and in this yard completed his knowledge in the practical part of naval architecture. The little ship, in which sir Francis Drake sailed round the world, was, by queen Elizabeth's order, laid up in a dock here, for a monument. Part of it still exists, in form of an elbow-chain, preserved in the museum at Oxford. The poet, Cowley, made this neighbourhood his retreat to pursue his botanical studies. Edward III. frequently resided here, at a moated house, or King John's house; and Henry IV. is said to have lived here while he was under cure of the leprosy. At the time of the Norman Conquest, this place was no more than a poor fishing village.

Here are also several pleasant villas; among others, of the princess of Wales, duke of Buccleugh, and earl of Dartmouth; and here stood the magnificent seat of sir Gregory Page, now, an emblem of human grandeur, levelled with the earth. Such was also the end of those noble palaces at Canons (see p. 169), and Eastbury, in Dorsetshire, built by the famous statesman, G. B. Doddington, celebrated by Thomson. A curious cavern was discovered in 1780, on the left side of the ascent to Blackheath. Morden-college was built by sir John Morden, a Turkey merchant, for decayed Turkey merchants. Upon this heath the Danish army lay encamped, about the year 1011, and many trenches and other remains of the lines of their camps are yet visible; though it may be, they are works of a later date. In 1381, the rebels Wat Tyler and Jack Straw, with a mob of one hundred thousand men, were encamped here. Green Man.

From the summit there is a fine view of London, and the adjacent country. The Thames also here exhibits a magnificent appearance. Here is a tower erected in memory of sir E. W. James, by his surviving lady. A considerable alteration is shortly to be made in the great road which leads through Rochester and Canterbury. The mails, stages, and other carriages, which have never come nearer than within three quarters of a mile of Gravesend, will, in future, pass through that town; and for that purpose a new road has been lately cut between it and the village of Northfleet, which is expected to be soon finished. Carriages will only touch at the top of the town, and then proceed by Milton Church, and come into the old road near Denton. About three miles of the old road will thus be rendered completely useless; and may be converted to the purposes of agriculture. Ten thousand pounds have been subscribed to make a new road from London to join this road near Bexley, for the purpose of avoiding Blackheath and Shooter's-bill. Bull.

In the adjacent heath and fields are several caves, supposed to have been formed by the Saxons, as places of security for their family and effects, during their wars with the Britons. In the church is a fine altar-piece. The place is also famous for a battle fought near it, between the Britons and Saxons, commanded by Hengist, in 457, in which the Britons were defeated.

D. R. $14\frac{1}{4}$ * DARTFORD 56

The rebellion of Wat Tyler began in this town. Here are the remains of a fine nunnery, founded by Edward III. At the dissolution it was converted into a royal palace; but it was alienated by James I.: a fine gateway only remains, and some contiguous buildings used as a farm house. The gateway is a stable for the farmer's house. The scite of the abbey was where the garden and rick-yard now are. Henry VIII. kept it in his own hands; Edward VI. granted it to Ann of Cleves, the rejected wife of his stern father. Queen Elizabeth rested in it, in her progress through Kent, in 1573. It is now the property of Charles Margate, esq. The gardens and orchards were encompassed by a stone wall, still entire. On the river Darent, upon which the town is seated, the first paper-mill in England was erected by sir John Spelman; and on this river the first mill for slitting iron bars, for making wire, was erected. Bull.

The church of this village is uncommonly large, and contains fragments of monuments as ancient as the fourteenth century. On the north wall is a beautiful alabaster monument to the memory of Edward Browne, who resided at Ingress, and is here interred: he was physician to Charles II. and eminent for his skill in natural history, as appears from his travels, which he published in 1635. Great quantities of lime are burnt here. Complete cockle-shells, filled with

The corporation has jurisdiction over the great oyster-fishery, in the several creeks of the Medway. Rochester appears to have been a Roman station, from the bricks in the walls, and coins which have been found here. This little city has met with many misfortunes. It was many times sacked and plundered by the Danes, and by the English kings and barons alternately. It was also, in its ancient time, frequently injured by fire. In 1281 its old wooden bridge was carried off by the ice, in a sudden thaw after a frost which made the Medway passable on foot. The Roman Watling-street-road passes through, from Shooter's-hill to Dover. In 1801, according to the return made to parliament, the population was 6817. Crown.—Bull.—Old King's Head.

28 $\frac{1}{4}$	* ROCHESTER 42 is a city, seated on the river Medway over which is a stone bridge. It is an ancient place, and was formerly much larger than at present. Its castle, now in ruins, once rendered it of great importance; and here also are some remains of a priory. It is a bishop's see, and has a handsome cathedral; it had three parish churches. It principally consists of one street, which is wide and paved. There is no manufactory in this place. Here is an alms-house for six poor travellers, who are supplied with a supper, a bed, and a breakfast, with four pence to carry them further on their journey; but they are to stay no longer than one night; and it is remarkable, that an inscription over the door intimates,	28 $\frac{1}{2}$	* CHATHAM 41 $\frac{3}{4}$ adjoins to Rochester, and is one of the principal stations of the royal navy, and the yards and magazines are furnished with all sorts of naval stores. In 1667 the Dutch sailed up to this town, and burnt several men-of-war; but the entrance into the Medway is now defended by Sheerness, and other forts. Here is a ship used as a church for the sailors. The Chest of Chatham was instituted in 1558, when the seamen in the service of queen Elizabeth agreed to allow a portion of each man's pay for the relief of their fellow-sailors, that had been wounded in the defeat of the Spanish armada, which custom was continued to the present time. Voltiger, king of the Britons, resided here after the Romans, and yielded it to the Saxons. At the time of the Conquest, according to Doomsday-book, there were 262 houses in this city. In 1801, when the inhabitants were numbered by act of parliament, the population was 9000. The cathedral, a large

It was once famous for the shrine of Thomas-à-Becket, visited by pilgrims from all parts of Europe. This turbulent priest having been murdered here in 1170, was afterwards made a saint; miracles were pretended to be performed at his tomb. Lewis the Seventh of France made a pilgrimage to this tomb, and bestowed on the shrine a jewel, esteemed the richest in Christendom; but Henry VIII. in 1538, not only pillaged this rich shrine, but caused the saint to be cited in court, tried and condemned as a traitor, ordering his name to be struck out of the calendar, his bones to be burnt, and his ashes thrown into the air. In this cathedral are interred Henry the Fourth and Edward the Black Prince. Here are many ruins of Roman and Saxon buildings, also of a castle built by William the Conqueror. The two gates of St. Augustine's monastery are still remaining, and are very stately. Here is a sumptuous conduit, erected by archbishop Abbot. Here are fourteen parish churches. It is an ancient and meanly-built city, in a declining state, notwithstanding it possesses a share of the silk manufactures introduced by the French refugees, who have a church under the cathedral. This city is noted for its brawn, and the adjacent country produces abundance of hops. It is seated on the river Stour. Here is a cotton mill for the manufactory of muslins. by nature and art, situated between high cliffs. It has an ancient castle, built on a high hill. It was repaired in 1756. and there are barracks in it for 3000 men. The town was once walled round, and had ten gates; there now remain only three, and those much out of repair. It is one of the Cinque Ports. It is the station of the packet boats that, in time of peace, pass between Dover and Calais which is only twenty-one miles. It was once of much larger extent, and had seven churches, which are now reduced to two in the town, and one in the castle. It was formerly a place of the greatest importance, and deemed the key of the island. The harbour is made by a gap in the cliffs, which are here of a sublime height, though certainly exaggerated in Shakspeare's celebrated description. Hence, in fine weather, is a prospect of the coast of France. On the shore, a mile from the town, is the residence during the summer months, of Mr. Smith, father of the gallant sir Sidney Smith, who has formed a complete mansion out of the chalk from the cliffs, and roofed it with old barges and fishing boats; which, without any other trouble than painting, to preserve them from the weather, form admirable garrets; and the excavations made in the rocks serve him for barns, granaries and stables. The population of Dover, as taken and returned to parliament in 1801, was 14,845. Here is a brass gun of twenty-two feet, of most curious workmanship, which was presented by the states of Utrecht to queen Elizabeth; it requires fifteen pounds of powder, and will carry a ball, it is said, seven miles. At the west end of an old church here, said to have been built by Lucius, the first christian king in Britain, there is a Roman pharos. The Roman Watling-street-road enters this town at Biggin-gate. There are some remains of a priory here, which is now a farm-house; and that which was the knights-templars' house, opposite to it, is made a store-house. From this dreadful cliff, on the 4th of August, 1750, one Hunter, who had cheated an inn-keeper of Canterbury of 40l. by a forged note, and was pursued, flung himself down 336 feet. He was taken up alive, but died on the 11th. Ship. —York House.—Royal Hotel.—City of London.

who was here the first astronomer royal. The English compute the longitude from the meridian of this place. The hospital is esteemed the finest structure of the kind in the world; and its noble hall is finely painted by sir James Thornhill. The chapel was destroyed, in 1779, by fire, but has been rebuilt, and decorated in a style of the most elegant simplicity, at the charge of 84,000*l*. Here was once a royal palace, in which queen Mary and queen Elizabeth were born, and in which Edward the Sixth died. It has been long pulled down, and on part of the scite of it now stands the house belonging to the ranger of the park, and which, from the Thames, appears in the centre beyond the two extremities of the hospital. In this town is a college, called the duke of Norfolk's college, although founded by Henry earl of Northampton, father of the celebrated earl of Surrey; it is for the maintenance of twenty decayed housekeepers. Here is an hospital, founded by Mr. Lambard, author of the Perambulation of Kent; the first erected by an English protestant subject. Here, during three years, the Danish navy, under their king Sweyn, rode triumphant; and at length their departure out of the realm was purchased at the rate of forty-eight thousand pounds, besides their maintenance during their stay. Their encampment was at Blackheath, above the town; and several barrows, supposed to have been graves of some of their chieftains, were to be seen in Greenwich-park. The foundation of the church is of great antiquity; it is dedicated to St. Alphege, archbishop of Canterbury, martyred on the spot by the Danes in 1011. The population, according to the return made to parliament in 1801, amounted to 14,339. Beyond it on the r. is West Combe, ——— Burgh, esq.

8 WOOLWICH is esteemed, in point of seniority, the mother dock of the royal navy. Here are several fine docks, rope-yards, and spacious magazines, in the navy and ordnance departments. Here is established a royal academy, under the Board of Ordnance, for the instruction of boys in engineering and military affairs. The largest ships ride here safely, even at low water. Part of the parish lies on the shore of Essex, where was once a chapel, yet it is in the county of Kent. It was an inconsiderable place till Henry VIII. founded a dock and magazines for naval stores, about the same time as that at Deptford. This king built here two of the largest ships which England had ever seen, the Regent, of a thousand tons, and the Harry Grace Dieu, supposed to carry a hundred guns. When it received its imperial master the sails were of cloth of gold. Both were unfortunate; the first was destroyed in 1512, in an engagement off the coast of France; the other accidentally burnt here, in the first year of queen Mary. Near Woolwich is sir T. Wilson's Crown and Anchor.

The new town, being sacked by the French and Spaniards, and deserted by the sea, soon fell into decay, and it is now dwindled to a mean place, though it still retains its privileges, and returns two members to parliament. It is seated on a rocky cliff, on an inlet of the sea, and had a haven, now choaked up. Three of its gates are still standing, but much decayed, and near three miles asunder over the fields. Here are many ruinous materials of ancient structures, which are so buried, that the streets have been turned into corn-fields, and the plough goes over the foundations. New Inn.

At this place, Cenulph, king of Wessex, was murdered, together with his attendants, by Kynehard, in 784. It had a celebrated abbey, founded in the reign of Henry I. in which several important transactions took place. Here king John is said to have slept, the night before he signed Magna Charta: probably, it may be of little consequence to know where a tyrant slept; but many will associate such a circumstance with reflections on what must have been the nocturnal feelings of that tyrant, when about to sign, by compulsion, such humiliating restraints upon his prerogative. Here a parliament was held in 1236, in which were enacted the famous provisions of Merton, the most ancient body of laws after Magna Charta; and the barons gave that celebrated answer to the clergy, "Nolumus leges Anglia mutare."—We will not change the laws of England. Nothing remains of this abbey but the east window of a chapel; and the walls which surround the premises, which are built of flint, are nearly entire, and inclose about sixty acres. 1 3/4 VAUXHALL 70 1/4
 Guy Faux, or Vaux, is said to have resided in a large mansion here, the scite of which is now occupied by Marble-hall and the Cumberland tea-gardens. In the road to Wandsworth is a fine spring, called Vauxhall-well, the water of which is esteemed serviceable for disorders of the eyes. Here are the most celebrated public gardens in Europe; the large room was built in 1667, by sir S. Morland. In the Spectator, No. 383, dated May 20, 1712, Addison introduces a voyage from the Temple-stairs to Vauxhall. It appears to have been at that time a place of public resort.

5 1/2 WANDSWORTH 66 1/2
 is near the confluence of the Wandlé with the Thames. The tower of the church is very ancient. It has a considerable iron-foundry, a white lead manufactory, snuff mills, calico printers, and dyers. In Garrat-lane, between this village and Tooting, there was formerly a ridiculous mock election, after every general election, of a mayor of Garrat, to which Foote's dramatic piece of that name gave, for some time, no small celebrity. Spread Eagle.

11 3/4 KINGSTON-UPON-THAMES 60 1/4 is a large and ancient town. A great national council was held here

R. R. D. R. in 838, at which Egbert, the first king of all England, and his son Athelwolf, were present; and in the record of this event, the town is called Kyningestun, famosa illa locus. The old chronicles, moreover, mention several of the Saxon monarchs who were crowned here, from Edward the Elder, in the year 900, to Edward the Martyr, in 975. This town sent members to parliament in the reigns of the 2d and 3d Edward; but it ceased to be a borough, in consequence of a petition from the corporation, praying to be released from the burthen. The wooden bridge here, over the Thames, is the most ancient on that river, except London-bridge, and the corporation have a revenue for its support. Here is another bridge of brick over a stream, which comes from a spring in a cellar four miles above the town, and forms such a brook, as to turn two mills, not many yards from it, and from each other. A chapel by the side of its church suddenly fell, in 1730, and buried the sexton, Esther Hamerton, under its ruins, where she remained seven hours: she survived this accident seven-teen years. In this place is Canbury-house, where is a very curious and spacious barn, in which twelve teams may unload at once. It has four entrances, four threshing floors, and is supported by twelve pillars. Sun.—Griffin.—Bull.—Castle.

Claremont was the seat of the earl of Newcastle, by whom, when earl of Clare, its present name was given; on which occasion Garth wrote his poem of Claremont, in imitation of “Cooper’s-hill.” It was purchased by the late lord Clive, who pulled it down, and erected an elegant house in a better situation.

is seated on the river Wey, and on the declivity of a hill. It had a large castle, of which some of the walls are still standing. The Wey is navigable to the Thames, and much corn and timber are carried upon it. This was, in the Saxon times, a royal villa, and where many of our kings passed their festivals. King Henry II. John, and Edward III. kept their Christmas here. Archbishop Abbot was born here, and founded and endowed an alms-house. There were three churches, but one of them fell down in 1740. 72 * PORTSMOUTH is the most considerable haven, for men-of-war, in England. This capacious harbour is made by a bay running up between the island of Portsea, on which the town is seated, and the opposite peninsula, having a narrow entrance, commanded by the town and forts. It is the most strongly fortified place in Great Britain. Many of the largest ships are always laid up here; and, in time of war, it is the principal rendezvous of the grand channel fleet. The docks, arsenals, store-houses, barracks, are all of capital magnitude, and kept in the most perfect order. The town is entirely supported by the resort of the army

The brave and unfortunate Robert, eldest son of William the Conqueror, landed here with his forces, when he made an attempt to recover his birth-right of the throne, which his younger brother Henry had seized. Charles II. was met here by Catherine, the infant of Portugal, and here married to her. His present majesty, George the Third, had a grand naval review here in 1773. 61 1/4 * ARUNDEL is a town seated on the side of a hill, on the Arun, which here is navigable for barges. The castle, the ancient seat of the duke of Norfolk, stands on the summit of the hill, and is said to be a mile in compass. The possession of this castle confers an earldom on its proprietor; and by this right the duke of Norfolk is earl of Arundel. No other spot in England possesses this peculiar dignity. It was given by the empress Maud to William de Albani, as a recompence for his defence of it against king Stephen. The present duke of Norfolk has fitted it up in a style of grandeur and magnificence worthy of its noble owner. In the church are some stately monuments of the earls of Arundel. It has a fine cathedral, crowned by a spire, the loftiest in the kingdom. It possesses a manufactory of flannels and linseys, of hardware and cutlery. Its cathedral was begun in 1219 by bishop Poor, who sent for architects from abroad. It was consecrated in the presence of king Henry III. It is esteemed one of the most beautiful structures in the kingdom. Here are three other churches. It is said that no less than twenty-eight of its bishops are interred in the cathedral. The office of chancellor of the order of the Garter is in the bishops of Salisbury. On Salisbury-plain, besides the famous monument of Stonehenge, there are the traces of many old Roman and British camps, and other remains of battles, fortifications, and sepulchres, of the ancient inhabitants of England. Three miles on the r. is Wilton, earl of Pembroke. One mile to the north is Old Sarum, which was supposed to be originally a principal station of the Romans. Coins of the emperors Adrian, Severus, Causius, Constantine, and others, have been, at different periods, found within its walls. It was a place of great celebrity in the time of the Saxons and early Britons. It is now much celebrated as a borough, and returning two members to parliament. The church is an ancient structure. Its doorways are evidently of Sax- on architecture. The font is very antique. It has a man- ufacture of shirt buttons, more of which are made here than in any other place in England. It is a place of great antiquity, as appears from doomsday-book, as well as from several stone coffins that have been dug up here, and from the head of a spear belonging to the ancient Britons, who were settled here, before the arrival of the Ro- mans. On the r. is Steepleton, P. Beckford, esq. Near it is Hand- ford, H. Seymour, esq.; and Ran- ston, P. W. Baker, esq. It is seated on the river Frome, on a Roman road. The houses are well built; a fine terrace-walk, planted with trees, almost surrounds the town. It has no manufactures, but is famous for its excellent ale, which is sent to all parts of the kingdom. This place was former- ly a city. At about half a mile distant stands Maiden-castle, with entrenchments, forty feet deep, thrown up round it in the time of the Romans. The Romans had an amphitheatre near it, which is called Mawnbury. It was one of the winter stations of the Roman legions; and many Roman coins have been dug up here, particu- larly king Dor's money, called Dorn-money. Among the anti- quities dug up here was a large Mosaic pavement, four feet under the surface of the ground, in a garden, and a brass image of a Roman deity. Part of its name was derived from a minster now standing, erected here by king Athelstan, for seven priests to pray for the departed souls of some persons buried here, who were killed in his army, when he defeated the Danes, at a bloody battle in a neighbouring field, which, to this day, is called King's-field, and their monuments are yet remaining in the church. 171 $\frac{1}{4}$ * EXETER 126 is a city and bishop's see, seated on the river Ex, whence it took its name, and over which is a handsome stone bridge. With its suburbs it contains, besides the cathedral, fifteen parish churches and four chapels. Ships of burthen formerly came up to this city; but the navigation was almost destroyed by one of the Courtenays, earls of Devon; it is, however, the seat of extensive foreign and domestic commerce. It has particularly a share in the fisheries of Newfoundland and Greenland. It is the Isa of Ptolemy and Antoninus. The see was transferred hither from Crediton by Edward the Confessor. It had six gates, besides turrets, many of which are destroyed. It had formerly so many convents, that it was called Monkton, till king Athelstan changed its name to Exeter, about 940, at which time he fortified the city. The cathedral is a magnificent and curious fabric, which, though near 500 years in building, appears as uniform as if it had had but one architect. In 1763, in removing the old pavement, was found the leaden coffin of bishop Bitton, who died in 1307. On the left hand

D. R. of the altar there yet exists the seat where Edward the Confessor and his queen sat, and installed Leofricus, the first bishop, who died in 1073. Here was once a castle, supposed to have been built by the West Saxon kings, Several dukes of Cornwall and Exeter have resided in it. Here yet remains the ancient chapel, built in 1260. Henrietta, queen of Charles I to whom this city gave shelter in the civil wars, was here delivered of a daughter, afterwards duchess of Orleans. Here there are many remains of ancient structures, which are daily giving way to more modern erections. According to Domesday-book, this city, at the time of the Conquest, contained 315 houses. According to the return of the population made to parliament in 1801 the number of inhabitants was 17,398. - 8 RICHMOND is esteemed the finest village in the British dominions, and was anciently called Shene, which, in Saxon, signifies resplendent. From the singular beauty of its situation it has been termed the Frescati of England. Here once stood a royal palace, in which Edward III. died of grief, for the loss of his heroic son, the Black Prince; and here died Anne, the wife of Richard II. This palace was beautified by Henry V. who founded three religious houses near it. In 1497, it was destroyed by fire, when Henry VII. was there; but he rebuilt it, and called it Richmond from the name which he bore before he obtained the crown. Here he died; and here also queen Elizabeth expired. Part of this palace, with battlements and a gateway, is still standing on Richmond-green. On the scite of part of it are now seats of the duke of Queensbury, Mrs. Way, W. Keene esq. Higher up the river are seats of the duke of Buccleugh, and of the earl of Leicester. The summit of Richmond-hill commands a most luxuriant prospect, which Thompson, who passed his latter years in this beautiful place, has celebrated in his Seasons. George III. spends much of his time upon this spot, and takes great delight in the gardens and grounds adjacent to his palace at Kew. Here is an elegant stone bridge over the Thames, and on the opposite banks are Twickenham meadows, in which are several elegant villas, and none more delightfully situated than that of lady Diana Beauclerk. not, however, omit to notice the celebrated villa of Pope, now of . In the life-time of Pope the house was humble and confined. The centre of the present building only was the residence of Pope. Towards the margin of the river, propped with uncommon care, still stands the weeping-willow, planted by Pope himself. In 1789, the late empress of Russia, in veneration of the memory of Pope, caused some slips of this tree to be planted in her own garden at Petersburg. The once celebrated grotto is no longer remarkable, but for having been erected under the immediate direction of the poet. Here is still to be seen the small obelisk, raised by filial piety, with this inscription—

Pope was buried in the parish church, to whose memory bishop Warburton erected a monument. Here is also the villa of the late Horace Walpole, earl of Orford, called Strawberry-hill, delightfully situated on an eminence near the Thames. This beautiful little structure, formed from select parts of Gothic architecture in cathedrals, chapel tombs, &c. was wholly built at different times, by himself, whose fine taste is displayed in the elegant embellishments of the edifice, and in the valuable collection of pictures, sculptures, antiquities, and curiosities, that adorn it, many of which have been purchased from some of the first cabinets in Europe. From the envy which this place created in other courtiers, he was constrained to give it to Henry the VIIIth. Of the ancient splendour of this palace there are few remains. The principal part of it was taken down in 1690; and the present structure was raised by king William, under the direction of sir C. Wren. To this palace Charles I. was brought by the army, in 1647. This delightful village is much frequented by the lovers of angling. At a small distance part of a Roman camp is still visible. Part of this parish is in Surrey, the Thames having formerly changed its course. The church was, at the same time, swept away, and the river runs over the old foundations. Here is a field, called the War-close, in which spurs, swords, and men's bones, have been dug up. In the Parsonage-house here, part of which is very ancient, the learned Erasmus passed some time with his friend and preceptor, Grocyn, then rector of this parish. In the church was a remarkable ancient font, noticed by Dr. Ducarel; but it has been removed. In this parish, near Walton-bridge, are Coway stakes, supposed to have been driven into the Thames by the Britons, to prevent Cæsar from fording the river, who was encamped near it on a hill, now called St. George's hill, or Cæsar's camp. Some of the stakes have, of late years, become objects of curiosity, and have been preserved in the British Museum, and by sir Joseph Banks, general Roy, and other lovers of antiquity. On the l. is Oatlands, duke of York, formerly a noble palace, though nothing remains of the ancient building but a gateway, from a design of Inigo Jones, which is not now where it originally stood. The views from this seat are beautiful; the river is seen in many of its mazes; and the prospects around are truly enchanting.

20 *CHERTSEY is a market town, seated near the Thames, over which is a handsome stone bridge. Here was once a stately abbey, in which was deposited the corpse of Henry the Sixth, which was afterwards removed to Windsor. It possessed an income at the dissolution of 744 pounds a-year, though it contained only fourteen monks. Out of the ruins of this abbey, all that remains of which is the outer wall of the circuit, sir H. Carew, master of the buck-hounds to Charles II. built a house upon the spot. To this town Cowley, the poet, retired, and here he ended his days, in a house called the "Porch House," now belonging to R. Clarke, esq. chamberlain of London. His study is a closet in the back part of the house, towards the garden. In 1773, in digging a vault in the chancel of the church, a leaden coffin was discovered, containing the body of a woman in high preservation; the face appearing perfectly fresh, and the lace of the linen was sound. As the church was built with the abbey, in the time of the Saxons, the body must have been long deposited. On the side of St. Anne's hill, in this parish, is the seat of the hon. C. J. Fox. On this hill yet remains part of a stone-wall, belonging to the chapel of St. Anne. Not far from it is Monk's-grove; near which is a once celebrated medicinal spring. In this parish the benevolent Mr. Day, author of Sandford and Merton, resided. Swan.

In the civil wars the town was taken in ten days, by the parliament forces. Its chief trade is in malt. Archbishop Laud was born in this town, and was a great benefactor to it. On a hill near it, is a remarkable bed of oyster-shells, of which there is an account in the Transactions of the Royal Society. It is now inhabited by a great number of the French emigrant clergy, who subsist upon the benevolence of the British nation. Near this palace is St. Mary's college, founded by William of Wykeham. The scholars are educated for New college, Oxford. Winchester was of great note in the time of the Saxons; and here Egbert was crowned, the first sole monarch of England. This inlet is navigable, almost to the head, for vessels of considerable burthen; and the two principal rivers that flow into it admit small craft some way up the country. It was formerly a port of great commerce. It contains five churches. It is surrounded by walls and watch-towers, and had a strong castle, now in ruins, to defend the harbour. It is a fashionable place of resort for sea-bathing. It was on this beach that the Danish king Canute gave that striking reproof to his flattering courtiers, when the disobedient tide washed his feet. At the time of the Conquest, according to Doomsday-book, this town contained 84 houses. In 1801, from the return made to parliament, the population was 7913. Here king Henry V. mustered his army, when he made his first expedition to France. Charles Vth, emperor, embarked here on board the English fleet for Spain; and king Philip of Spain landed here, when he came to marry queen Mary. At St. Mary's hamlet, a little to the east, stood the old Roman town, called Clausentum. Two miles from it is Woodmillis, where there is a curious manufactory of ship-blocks, from which the king's yards are supplied. Four miles from it, on the banks of the river, is Cadland-park, R.  PLYMOUTH is a seaport, situated between the Plym and the Tamar. Next to Portsmouth it is the most considerable harbour in England for men-of-war. The fortifications are considerable; but, in the American war, when the combined fleets of France and Spain appeared off the coast, the means of defence were found to have been so much neglected, that it could have made little resistance, had it been attacked. There are, properly speaking, three harbours, called Catwater, Sutton Pool, and Hamouze. The first is the mouth of the Plym, and affords a safe and commodious harbour for merchant ships, but is seldom entered by ships of war; the second is frequented by merchant ships only, and is almost surrounded by the houses of the town; the third is near the mouth of the Tamar, and is the harbour for the reception of the British navy, being fitted with moorings for about 100 sail, and having good anchorage for a much greater number. Adjoining to it are docks, arsenals, and other conveniences for the building and fitting out of ships of war. The town is well supplied with fresh water, which was first conveyed hither from a distance of seven miles, at the expence of sir Francis Drake, who was born here. At the entrance of the bay lies the Eddystone Rock, upon which is a light-house. In the reigns of Edward III. and Henry IV. the French landed here, and set fire to the town. Its population, as taken and returned to parliament in 1801, was 43,194. On the l. is Tothill, J. Culme, esq. King's Arms.—Prince George.—Globe.

is a borough, seated at the conflux of the Willy and Nadder, and is an ancient place, formerly the chief of the county. It has a famous manufactory of carpets and of thin woollen stuffs. The first

D. R. carpet ever made in England was manufactured at Wilton, by Anthony Duffosy, who was brought from France by the grandfather of the present earl of Pembroke. It was very populous in the time of the Saxons, being then the see of a bishop. Here is Wilton-house, earl of Pembroke. It was begun in the reign of Henry VIII. on the ruins of a nunnery, and is now a magnificent palace. Holbein and Inigo Jones designed the buildings. Here sir Philip Sydney wrote his Arcadia: Vandyke drew many of the family portraits; Thomas, the seventh earl, completed the collection of pictures, and assembled the throng of statues, which amount to thirty-six, with 133 busts. Henry, the last earl but one, has shewn, by a bridge designed by himself, that, had Inigo Jones never lived, Wilton-house might have been a villa worthy of ancient Rome. The celebrated collection of antiques in this villa contains the whole collection of the cardinals Richelieu and Mazarine, and the greatest part of the earl of Arundel's.

The entrance from Shaftsbury is wild and picturesque. It still retains the appearance of Gothic magnificence.

R. R. D. R. A new house has been erected a mile from the castle, on a grand plan. A few miles to the r. of the road is Font-hill, W. This town is supposed to have been built in the eighth century, and to have been enlarged by king Alfred; and had a benedictine monastery in the time of the Saxons. Large quantities of malt liquor are also sent from this town to Bristol for exportation. It had once a castle, now in ruins, built by Ina, king of the West Saxons. Here is a handsome stone pentagon cross, with statues, in the market-place. Here are two parish churches; in one of which is an epitaph on a taylor, who, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, invented ruffs. This was the scene of many bloody executions in the reign of James II.; after the defeat of the duke of Monmouth at Sedgmoor, near this town, under the direction of general Kirk and judge Jeffreys. WELLS is a city, seated at the foot of a hill, and has its name from the wells and springs about it; and though it is but small, is a bishop's see, together with Bath. The cathedral is a stately structure. Wells is the centre of a great manufactory of knit worsted stockings. Its cathedral, at first a monastery, was built by Ina, king of the West Saxons, in 905. It is a venerable and awful pile, truly Gothic, but one of the richest workmanship; the niches which fill the entire front, towers, and sides of the building, are occupied by figures as large as life, representing abbots, cardinals, nuns, kings, apostles, warriors, &c. well contrasted, and various in attitudes and designs, &c. In it are many monuments dug out of the ruins of Glastonbury abbey. A plain white stone, under the centre of the nave, is said to cover king Ina. The beautiful cloister is built in a superior style. The palace is fortified with walls and a moat. The fine chapel in it was built by bishop Fitz-Jocelyn. The great hall is now used for a garden, and the porch serves for a coach-house. Swan.—Christopher.

	place, which is usually reckoned a part of Newbury, to which it extends, and was once a town of considerable trade. Near the church is a remarkably distinct echo; and in it are some old monuments. At Newbury there was formerly a great manufactory of broad-cloth; and in the reign of Henry VIII. flourished here John Winscomb, called Jack of Newbury, one of the greatest clothiers in England, who kept 100 looms in his house; and, in the expedition to Flodden-field against the Scots, marched with 100 of his own men, armed and clothed at his own expence. He also built the west part of the church. Its poor are now chiefly employed in spinning. Two battles were fought near this town, with dubious success, between the forces of Charles I. and the parliament, in 1643 and in 1644; in the first of which was slain the accomplished and virtuous lord Falkland. 106 $\frac{1}{4}$ * BATH. This city has been famous, from the time of the Romans, for its hot springs, the most remarkable in England, and inferior to few in Europe: they are not only used as baths, but internally as a medicine; and great benefit is derived from them in gouty, paralytic, bilious, and other cases. The reputation of these waters is so much increased, that Bath is become the principal resort, next to the metropolis, for persons of rank and fortune, and for the constant residence of opulent invalids, as well as of numerous votaries of dissipation. In splendour and elegance of buildings it exceeds every town in England, being constructed of a white stone, of which the surrounding soil is chiefly composed. It is seated on the river Avon, in a valley, and, from the reflection of the sun's rays from the white soil, is very hot in summer. The principal seasons for the waters are spring and autumn. The poor, who come here to drink them, may be received in a magnificent hospital. It is supposed to be very ancient. King Edgar was crowned here. At the time of the Conquest, according to Doomsday-book, there were sixty-four houses here. The population, taken and returned to parliament in 1801, was 32,200. I. R. Henry I. and was the residence of our succeeding monarchs, till Edward III. who was born in it, caused the ancient building to be taken down, and erected the present structure, and St. George's chapel, inclosed the whole with a rampart of stone, and instituted the order of the Garter. Great additions were made to it by Edward IV., Henry VII., Henry VIII., Elizabeth, and Charles II. The latter restored the castle to its pristine splendour. His present majesty, George III. has also made great improvements in it. It is seated on a high hill, which rises by a gentle ascent; and on the declivity of this hill is a fine terrace. It is one of the noblest walks in Europe, as to its strength, its grandeur, and its beautiful prospects. The royal apartments are adorned with many valuable paintings. St. George's chapel is a beautiful structure in the purest style of Gothic architecture, and was originally erected by Edward the Third, in 1377, in honour of the order of the Garter: but, however noble the first design, Edward the Fourth not finding it completed, enlarged it, and began the present building, which was completed by Henry VII. with the assistance of sir Reginald Bray, knight of the Garter. The interior architecture has always been greatly admired, particularly its stone roof. The whole was repaired and beautified with the greatest taste in 1790. In this chapel are interred Henry VI., Edward IV., Henry VIII., his queen Jane Seymour, and Charles the First. The queen's lodge, which is the residence of the royal family, is a modern building, on the south-east side of the castle. Half a mile east of Windsor is Frogmore, the favourite retreat of the queen. 113 *BRISTOL. In wealth, trade, and population, this city and seaport has long been reckoned one of the most considerable in this kingdom. It is seated at the confluence of the Avon with the Frome. The tide rising to a great height in these narrow rivers brings vessels of considerable burthen to the quay, which extends along the inner shores of the Frome and Avon; but at low water they lie aground. Bristol has eighteen churches, besides its cathedral, the most remarkable of which is St. Mary Radcliffe, one of the finest in the

R. R. D. R. H. R. kingdom. It has a prodigious trade. Here are fifteen glass-houses; and the sugar refinery is one of its principal manufactures. The hot wells are much frequented; they are of great purity, have obtained a high reputation in the treatment of consumptive cases, and are about a mile from the city. In St. Vincent's Rock, above this well are found those native crystals, so well known by the name of Bristol stones. In the college green stands a stately high cross of Gothic structure, decorated with the effigies of several of the kings of England. They use sledges instead of carts, because the vaults of the common sewers will not admit them. The walls, which were raised in the reign of William II. have been long demolished; but there are several gates yet standing. It became a bishop's see in the reign of Henry the Eighth. Its population, taken in 1801, and returned to parliament, was 68,645. Bush.—White Lion.—White Hart —Talbot.

He encompassed this college with a high wall and turrets. William Cannings, a merchant of Bristol, and the founder of Radcliffe church there, was a great benefactor to this college. Growing old, and weary of the world, he retired hither, took priest's orders, and became dean of the college. Its castle, built in 1221, is one of the noblest ruins in Britain; it was larger than any castle in England, except that of Windsor, and, from what remains of it, appears to have been extremely beautiful. One half of a round tower has fallen quite down, but the other half overhangs its basis more than nine feet, and is as great a curiosity as the leaning tower of Pisa, in Italy. The town consists only of straggling houses.

Its castle was built in the reign of Henry VII. It is a large and noble ruin, though more perfect than ruins of this kind usually are. Near the castle stands the citadel, a large octagonal tower, encircled by a separate moat, and was formerly joined to the castle by a draw-bridge. The great extent of the castle, the grandeur and number of the apartments, and the size of the offices and cellars, give proofs of baronial magnificence, and splendid hospitality, scarcely conceivable in the present times.

The grand establishment of the first marquis of Worcester is recorded in Heath's account of Raglan Castle, the numerous officers of his household, retainers, attendants, and servants, appear like the retinue of a sovereign rather than a subject. He supported for a considerable time a garrison of eight hundred men; and on the surrender of the castle, besides his own family and friends, the officers alone were no less than four colonels, eighty-two captains, sixteen lieutenants, six cornets, four ensigns, and four quarter-masters; besides fifty-two esquires and gentlemen. The demesnes of the castle corresponded with the magnitude of the establishment; besides the gardens and pleasure-grounds adjoining to the mansion, the farms were numerous and well-conditioned; the meadows about Landenny were appropriated for the dairy; an extensive tract of land, clothed with oak and beech, formed the home-park; and the red-deer park stretched beyond Landeilo Cressency. Beaufort Arms.

99 * WINCHCOMBE is watered with a brook that runs into the Avon. It was anciently a county by itself, till in the reign of king Ethelred it was laid to Gloucester, and was a borough in the reign of Edward the Confessor. It had an abbey, and its abbot was mitred, and sat in parliament. There are now scarcely any ruins of it visible. The inhabitants planted tobacco here, with success, till the reign of Charles II. The town is now much decayed, and the plough passes over the scite of its ancient magnificent buildings.

church, are the images of several kings and abbots, and, among the rest, of St. Guthlac, to whom the 127 $\frac{1}{2}$ * GLASTONBURY is a town, seated near a high hill, called the Tor, and is noted for a famous abbey, some magnificent ruins of which are still remaining; but they have been much diminished for the sake of the stones. The curious structure, called the abbot's kitchen, is entire, and is of a very unusual contrivance. The only manufacture here is stockings; but the chief support of the place is from the resort of people to see the ruins of the abbey. The George Inn was formerly called the Abbot's Inn, because it was a receptacle for the pilgrims that came to the abbey. It was pretended that the bodies of Joseph of Arimathea, of king Arthur, and of king Edward the Confessor, were buried here. The last abbot of this place was hanged on the top of the Tor, by order of king Henry VIII. for not acknowledging his supremacy. The walls that remain of the abbey are overgrown with ivy, and the aspect of the whole is grand and venerable. At a little distance from the old church are two remarkable pyramids, with inscriptions, in unintelligible characters, and an image in bishop's vestments. This place is, at present, large, and has two churches. Near to it, on a high hill, is a tower, which commands an extensive prospect, and serves as a landmark to seamen. White Hart.

147½ * CAERLEON was a Roman town, as is evident from the anti-ruins of a castle. It had three churches, an university, and was the see of a bishop, afterwards removed to St. David's. Its walls were built by the Romans with brick, three miles in compass

 Many remains of its ancient magnificence are still extant; among which are the walls of a theatre.
 It is supposed to have been the metropolis of the British empire, and the favourite residence of the renowned king Arthur, and his knights of the round table. It is now become a small, insignificant town. Not far from Caerleon is able for the residence of the cele-

- 100½ * EVESHAM is seated on a hill, which rises with a gradual ascent from the Avon, which almost surrounds it, and over which is a stone bridge. It contains three churches, and was formerly noted for its abbey. Its abbot was mitred; and the abbey was one of the largest and most stately in England. Here is a tower, built by one of its abbots, and which was one of the gates of the abbey, of which it is the only relic. A wall yet remains near the bridge, which shews the boundary of the abbey. Near the bridge was a castle, which, in 1157, was demolished. Here are considerable garden grounds around it, whose produce supplies the adjacent towns. Its chief manufacture is woollen stockings. The vale of Evesham is on the banks of the Avon, and celebrated for its fertility and beauty. In this vale Simon de Montfort, earl of Leicester, was defeated and slain, in 1265, the very year in which, by virtue of his usurped authority, that admirable part of our constitution, the House of Commons, is said to have first received its existence.

Roman antiquities have been found here. The church and monastery appear to have been stately edifices. The remains of the abbey are in small detached parts, but which mark its original magnitude. Several persons of considerable distinction were buried here, but no memorial now remains to preserve their memory, or to point out their place of interment. The western part of the church is coeval with the Saxon or early Norman age. This place gave birth to Dr. Adam Lyttleton, in 1624, author of the Latin dictionary, &c. and in 1714, to the poet Shenstone. The chief manufacture is in making nails. is a considerable town, with a great weekly market for corn and oatmeal. The palace of Dalkeith, the seat of the duke of Buccleugh, is a magnificent structure. On the spot there formerly stood a castle: it was built on a perpendicular rock of great height, and inaccessible on all sides, except the east. On the defeat of the Scots at the battle of Pinkie, in 1547, James earl of Moreton, sir David Wedderburne, and others, fled to this castle, and were at last obliged to surrender, for want of provisions. In 1660 this castle was the head-quarters of general Monk. The park is beautiful, containing about 800 Scotch acres, elegantly planted with a variety of trees, and surrounded by a wall of nine feet in height. On the l. is Melville-castle, lord Melville. Near Dalkeith, on the l. is Woodburn, J. Ker, esq. and Newbattle, marquis of Lothian. Beyond on the l. is Drum, lord Sommerville. The environs of Kelso are very fine. From the Chalkheugh is a beautiful view of the forks of the rivers; Rosburgh-hill; Springwood-park, the seat of sir G. Douglas; and the Fleurs, the duke of Roxburgh. From Pinnacle-hill, Robert Davison, esq. is seen a vast extent of country, highly cultivated, watered by long reaches of the Tweed, and well wooded on each margin. Much wheat is raised in this neighbourhood; and the fleeces of the sheep are remarkably fine. In this neighbourhood are also the seats of the hon. G. Baillie; Wooden, R. Walker, esq.; Softlaw, Dr. Monro; Rosebank, R. Scott, esq.; Sharpellaw, J. Hood, esq.; Paradise, rev. Dr. Pardon; Edenside, J. Bland, esq.; and Sydenham, admiral Dickson. It was destroyed by fire, together with the whole town, in the reign of Richard I. It was soon rebuilt by the nuns. It is most delightfully situated, being washed by a fine rivulet which runs by the side of the abbey and through the gardens. Many of the original offices are yet remaining. Its church has a handsome tower,similar to those of Rochester cathedral. At some distance, west of the abbey, is an ancient stone building, coeval with the abbey, supposed to have been a prison belonging to it. *Swan.—George. Bear.To WORSTEAD.To NORWICH, see p. 16. There was a great number of coins of the lower empire discovered on the same spot. There are foundations of a stone wall. Higher up the hill are more extensive foundations, supposed to have been a town. A wall has been built round the Roman pavement, and a wooden roof placed over it.

	Here are many coal-pits and iron- mines, some of them exhausted. It is said, that an inhabitant of this parish is possessed of the cra- dle of king Henry the Fifth, who was born at Monmouth: the whole is made of oak; and the part where the infant lay is an oblong chest, open at the top, with an iron ring at the head, and another at the feet, by which it hangs upon hooks fixed in two upright pieces, strong- ly mortised in a frame, which lies upon the floor. Thus suspended, D. R. Owen Goch was confined for more than twenty years, for having joined in a rebellion against his brother Llewelyn ap Iorweth, the last prince of Wales. Near the castle is a tremendous cataract, called Caunant Mawr, the height of which is more than sixty feet. Not far from hence is a small copper mine, belonging to the company of proprietors who reside at Macclesfield. From this castle is an easy ascent to the summit of Snowdon, four miles and a half distant. Here the traveller enters the beautiful vale of Llanberis.

10 LLANBERIS is a very romantic village, surrounded by vast rocks. On the l. of the village is the mountain Glyder Vawr, the loftiest of all the Caernarvonshire mountains, except Snowdon, from the summit of which is a grand and unbounded prospect. At the end of the vale is a most romantic pass.

 a small place on the coast, chiefly supported by copper mines. About one mile from it is the Parys Mountain, that inexhaustible mine of copper, and by consequence of wealth to all the proprietors. Two miles to the east is Llan Elian. There are two mines in the Parys Mountain which join upon each other; of these, the earl of Uxbridge is possessed of one half, and the other is betwixt the rev. Edward Hughes of Kinmael, near St. Asaph, and Thomas Williams, esq. of Llanedan. The latter holds his share upon lease from lord Uxbridge, which will soon expire, when Mr. Hughes and his lordship will become the sole proprietors. It is supposed that the Romans got copper ore from this mountain; from which time, till the year 1764, these mines seem to have been entirely neglected. The bed of ore, which is of unknown extent, is, in some places, twenty-four yards in thickness; and the number of men employed is more than one thousand. The mines have increased the value of lands of the parish from about 1400l. to 5000l. a-year, and upwards; the number of houses from 200 to more than 1000; and the population from about 900 to about 8000.

The castle stands in the grounds of lord B. close to the town, and covers much ground: it was built by Edward I. One mile from it, near the seat of sir Robert Williams, and not far from the shore, stand the poor remains of the house of Franciscan friars, founded by Llewelyn ap Iorweth, prince of North Wales, before 1240: so little of it is now left, that it forms only part of the walls of a barn. Near this place, in the year 819, a severe battle was fought betwixt the Welch and the Saxons, under Egbert, who had invaded the island, and given it the name of Anglesea. Two miles north of Friars is the priory of Penmon, now in ruins. Just off the Point is Priestholme Island, famous for the resort of birds, called puffin auk. The neighbouring vale, called Gwynant, should certainly be visited by the traveller. One mile and a half on the l. is Dinas Emerys, the place from whence Merlin's prophecies were delivered. Llyn-y-Dinas, a pool in a delightful situation in the vale, abounding in large and well-flavoured trout, is two miles from hence. Snowdon may be ascended from this place; the distance to the summit is about six miles; but the track is more rugged than that from Dolbadarn-castle, near Llanberis. 	is a small irregular town; it was once surrounded with a ditch and ramparts, which are now nearly destroyed. It is frequented as a bathing-place. From this place there are packets which set sail every tide from Chester and Parkgate; it is a charming and expeditious mode of travelling. Flint-castle stands upon a rock. Here is the county gaol, and a large smelting-house. Royal Oak.

The situation is delightful, commanding an extensive prospect of the river Dee, Chester, Park-gate, and the Lancastrian hills. White Horse.
21½	THE LEAD MINES	53
	The road from Holywell to St. Asaph is rugged, but pleasant. On an eminence, about one mile and half from the lead mines, on the r. is a high round tower, somewhat like an old windmill, supposed to have been a Roman pharos.
28	THE VALE OF CLWYD..	46½
	an extensive prospect on entering this celebrated vale. Towards the south stands Denbigh, with the shattered remains of its castle, crowning the summit of a rocky steep in the middle of the vale; on the north is the castle of Rhyd-dlan. The intervening space is enlivened with meadows, woods, cottages, herds, and flocks, scattered in every pleasing direction, whilst the whole is bounded by

D. R. the sea, and the dark retiring mountains.

30 1/2 ST. ASAPH, see p. 136. . . . 44
From the top of the cathedral is an extensive view along the vale. White Lion. The tourist from St. Asaph may visit Denbigh, five miles and a half, or Rhyddlan-castle, three miles. At this latter place king Edward I. assembled the barons and chief men of Wales, to inform them that he had appointed for them a prince, a native of their own country, his son Edward, afterwards Edward II. who had not long before been born at Caernarvon.

34 1/2 KINMAEL. 40

a small village, with the sea on the r. and a range of low rocks on the l. of the road. It is frequented in the summer as a retired bathing place.

39 1/4 LLANDULAS. 34 3/4
Beyond, the road winds round a huge lime-stone rock, called Penmaen Rhos. Mr. Pennant supposes that it was in some of the deep bottoms of this neighbourhood that Richard the Second was surprised by a band of armed ruffians, placed there by the earl of Northumberland, for the purpose of betraying him into the hands of Bolinbroke, at Flint.

where post-chaises are kept for the accommodation of travellers. The river Conway is here about half a mile over; it was formerly noted for its pearl fishery; and pearls have been taken here, at different times, ever since the Roman conquest. They are found in a shell

D. R. fish, called the pearl muscle, peculiar to stony and rapid rivers. They are said to be produced from a disease in the fish, somewhat analogous to the stone in the human body: they have been sold from four to ten guineas each. It is said that sir Richard Wynne, of Gwydir, chamberlain to Catherine, queen of Charles II. presented her majesty with a pearl taken in this river, which is to this day honoured with a place in the regal crown.

49 CONWAY, Caernarvonshire 25 1/2
A more beautiful or more picturesque town can scarcely be found. The castle stands upon a rock, two sides of which are washed by a river. Its architecture and position are truly grand, and denote the spirit and judgment of its founder, king Edward I. The hall is the most remarkable apartment now left; it is 130 feet long, 32 broad, and about 22 in height. Edward I. after his conquest of the Welsh, with his queen, and great part of the English nobility, spent a Christmas at this castle. The walls around the town, which are built upon the solid rock, and betwixt twelve and fifteen feet in thickness, are nearly entire. There are yet some poor remains of the Cistercian abbey, founded in 1185 by Llewelyn ap Jorweth, prince of Wales. Plas Mawr is an antique looking house, built in 1535 by Robert Wynne, esq. of Gwydir. On the side of a hill, three miles north of Conway ferry, is Gloddaeth, the beautiful seat of sir Thomas Mostyn, built in the reign of queen Elizabeth, a place surrounded with charming scenery. Beyond which is Diganwy, an ancient castle, founded about the time of the Norman conquest. Five miles and a half to the south of Conway is Cacr Hên, the Conovium of the Romans. The is a village, beautifully situated on the banks of the turbulent little river Ogwen, and has a neat church, built in the form of a cross, having the tower in the centre. Here was buried Dr. Williams, archbishop of York, and lord-keeper in the reign of Charles I. Beyond on the r. is Penrhyn, the seat of lord Penrhyn; it is supposed to stand on the scite of a palace which belonged to Roderic Moelwynog, prince of Wales, who reigned about 720.

CROYDON to GUILDFORD
(101).

- 2 BEDINGTON..... 23
is a pleasant village. Here is the seat of the ancient family of the Carews. It is said to have been, for a time, the residence of queen Elizabeth: a lock, with her arms, is on one of the doors; and, half a mile to the east of the house, is an avenue of trees, called queen Elizabeth's walk. The park is still famous for walnut-trees. The church is a handsome Gothic pile of stone.
- 3 CARSHALTON..... 22
is seated among many springs, which form a river in the very village. Here Dr. Ratcliffe built a house; and here is the seat and park once possessed by the family of Scawen.

The length of this lake is about six miles; the greatest breadth about three quarters of a mile; the greatest depth does not exceed forty fathoms. The shores are frequently indented, and the bays open in a variety of forms. Above the village of Nibthwaite the lake opens in full view. On the western margin stands Coniston-hall, concealed in a grove of tall trees; and above it, the village of Coniston. The hall has changed its masters only twice since the Conquest, and has belonged to the family of Fleming most of the time. The char taken here are said to be the finest in England; they are taken later than on Windermere Water, and continue longer in the spring. | |

48½ HAWKSHEAD 183½

On a steep hill, surrounded with wood, is a back view of the lake. To the north is a most tremendous scene of mountains heaped upon mountains, in every variety of horror. The church is seated on the front of an eminence, commanding the vale, which is washed by Esthwaite Water, which is two miles in length, and half a mile in breadth. This lake is encompassed with a good carriage road. On its banks are villages and houses, adding to the beauty of the scene; among others is Bellmont, a handsome modern house, charmingly situated. The fish here are perch, pike, eel, and trout; no char are found in this lake.

51 THE FERRY 181

There is another road to Windermere by Ambleside; but to those who ride on horseback this may be the more eligible, leading to the centre of the lake, where all its beauties are seen to the greatest advantage. This road is through the villages of Colthouse and Sawreys. Near the isthmus of the Ferry Point, on the western side, may be ascended the top of the nearest rock, and from thence, in two views, are commanded all the beauties of this magnificent lake. In front are seen Berkshire Island, or Ramps Holme, clothed in wood; Rough Holme is a circular isle, covered with trees; Lady Holme, where formerly stood an oratory, is of an oval shape; forming with other isles a spacious archipelago. To the north is a most magnificent scene. After surveying this extensive scenery, return to the road, follow the left path, till you arrive at Harrow, a farm-house. This is a charming picture. Here the lake is again caught, and the village of Bowness hangs on its banks. Descend to the Ferry-house, and proceed to the great island, where the lake will present a new and charming view. This island was long the property of the family of Philipson; and sir Christopher Philipson resided upon it in the reign of queen Anne. It now belongs to J. C. Curwen, esq. who has adorned the mansion, and rendered it one of the sweetest places that can be imagined. From the south side of the island is a noble extent of water, whose shore is beautifully wooded, and highly cultivated: the upper parts are wild, and grazed with flocks. From the north side of the island the views are grand and sublime. The lake is here seen both ways. Its borders are adorned with villages and cots. Rydall-hall is sweetly seated amid these scenes. Rayrig and Calgarth grace its banks. The latter is the property of Dr. Watson, the learned bishop of Landaff, who has built an elegant mansion here, and made large plantations. From these scenes the traveller usually sails down to Rawlinson's Nab, a peninsular rock, where are beautiful views to the north and to the south. For the purpose of taking a general view of the lake, return to Bowness, and, taking the bye-road to the turnpike, mount the hill, till the top is almost gained, when the prospect at his feet will astonish the traveller; a more charming assemblage of the beauties of nature is not to be found: not a bulrush or a reed defiles the margin of this imperial lake. No lake, except Lomond, can boast of mountains so vast, with such variety and diversity of shore. On its banks are many elegant villas: Brathay, — Law, esq.; Croft-lodge, miss Pritchard; Bell-field, Mrs. Taylor; Stors, sir J. Legard; Fell Foot,

D. R. — Dixon, esq. They who are delighted with water expeditions may enjoy them here in the highest perfection. The fish of this lake are char, trout, perch, pike, and eel: its greatest depth is 222 feet. The fall from Newby-bridge to the high-water-mark of the tide at Low Wood, two miles distant, is 105 feet; the bottom of the lake is therefore 117 feet below the high-water-mark of the sea.

53 BOWNESS 179 is only remarkable for some remains of fine painted glass in its church, that were brought from Furness Abbey. Along the side of the lake to 59 AMBLESIDE 173 the Low Wood inn, two miles short of Ambleside, will attract the traveller's notice; no other inn in this route has so fine a view of a lake. A small cannon is kept here, to gratify the curious with the remarkable reverberations of its sound at this place. On the top of an eminence behind Rayrig (which is said to resemble Voltaire's seat at Ferney, on the lake of Geneva), is a fine view of the northern extremity of the lake. At a small distance short of Ambleside, down a bye-road to the l. is the vestige of a Roman station. It lies in a meadow, and is supposed to be the Dictis, where a part of the cohort Nerviiorum Dictentium was stationed. Roman coins and urns have been frequently found in this village; and, in forming the turnpike road through Rydal, an urn was lately taken up, which contained ashes, and other Roman remains. One mile above Ambleside is a cascade, called Stock-gill, deserving of observation. It is the most curious that occurs in this tour.

61 RYDAL 171 The Hall, a seat of sir Michael le

D. R. Fleming, has a grand situation, at the feet of stupendous mountains, and commands a charming view of Windermere. Here are two cascades worthy of notice: one, a little above the house, a mighty torrent, tumbling headlong, shaking the mountain with its fall, and the air with its noise; there is a convenient path to it, made by sir Michael: the other cascade is a small fall of water, seen through the windows of the summer-house in sir Michael's orchard. Rydal Lake is about a mile in length, spotted with little isles, and communicating, by a narrow channel, with 63 GRASSMERE WATER .. 169 From the top of Grassmere-hill is a view as sweet as the eye ever beheld; it is finely described by Gray. The church stands at a small distance from the lake, on the side of the river Rothay. The broken head of Helme Crag has a fine effect from this point. Descend the hill, leave the church on the r. and soon enter the road. The island is near the centre, unless the water be very low.

The stones have the appearance of a barrow. The wall that divides the counties is built over them. Leaving the vale of Grassmere, the road leads to is a small, neat town, renowned for its adjacent lake, called Derwent Water. The whole extent of it is about three miles from north to south, of irregular form, and its greatest breadth exceeds not a mile and a half. The best method of viewing this enchanting water is in a boat, and from the banks. From Cockshut-hill a general view of it may be seen; and from hence it appears in great beauty. From Crow-park is also a celebrated station to view the lake. From the r. of Stable-hills, on the edge of the common, with Wallow Crag on the l. is a pleasing and beautiful view of its islands and variegated shores. The road leads along Barrowside, on the margin of the lake. The pride of descent would blush, were it to be told, that in a recess in the neighbourhood of Keswick Lake, a man is now living who enjoys exactly the same property which his lineal ancestor possessed in the reign of Edward the Confessor.

 Here are the remains of a fort, and much freestone has been quarried out of its ruins. The fort is said to have been of Roman origin: the Saxons, and after them the monks of Furness, maintained this fort. Grange was the place where they laid up their grain and their tithe, and also the salt they made at the salt-spring; of which works there are still some vestiges remaining. From the top of Castle Crag there is a most astonishing view of Derwent Water, spread out to the north in the most picturesque manner. The road continues good to

The lower lake soon opens after you leave the village, and pass through an oaken grove. This small lake is beauti- fied with three small isles. These lakes are deeper than Derwent Water, and produce char. Cro- mack Lake is four miles in length, and in some places near half a mile over. Adjoining to these, by the river Cocker, is Lowes Water; a lake, one mile in length, in breadth about a quarter of a mile; it is of no great depth, is without char, but abounds with pike and perch, and trout. The shores here are bold, rocky, wooded, and much embayed. The ride along the banks is charming. This lake is deep, and breeds char, with a variety of other fish. Its water is clear, but not so transpa- rent as Derwent Water. The stones at the bottom and along the shores are coated with mud. The navigators of this lake are much amused with the curious ef- fect of the echo of discharged guns. The higher end of the lake is four- teen miles from Penrith, and ten from Ambleside.
184 $\frac{1}{2}$	PENRITH 47 $\frac{1}{2}$
	There are many pleasing rides in this neighbourhood, leading either to curious remains of antiquity, or to modern rural improvements. In Whinfield-park are the countess- pillar, the white-hart-tree, and the three-brothers-trec; the first is a filial tribute of Ann countess dow- ager of Pembroke, to the memory of her mother, Mary countess dowager of Cumberland. Broug- ham-castle is an awful ruin, the Brovoniacum of the Romans, and the pride of the earls of Westmore- land for many centuries. At Lit- tle Salkeld is the largest druidical circle in the north. Near Emont- bride is Arthur's Round Table, and near it is Mayburgh, both of remote antiquity. The remains of Shap Abbey are inconsiderable, but picturesque. Near it is a spring, called Shap Spa, similar in smell and taste to that at Harrow- gate, and frequented for the same uses. Through Lowther, Ask- ham, and Bashpton, to

The road leads through Long-Sledale to

The approach to it from the north is pleasant; it is watered by the Kent, a noble river. Here are manufactories of coarse woollen cloths, linseys, and knit worsted stockings; of fish-hooks, and wool-cards. A quarry of marble has been lately found near it: it takes the highest polish and is variegated with different colours. Here is a handsome house of sir Alan Chamber, one of the barons of the exchequer. The church is a large Gothic fabric, with a square tower, in which are monuments of the families of Bellingham, Strickland, and Parr. The remains of the castle are on a fine hill. In this neighbourhood are many delightful rides. Down the east side of the river leads to Levens-park, the seat of R. B. Howard, esq. Here is one of the sweetest spots that fancy can imagine: the woods, the rocks, the river, the grounds, are all beautifully varied. There is a petrifying spring in the park, that incrusts vegetable bodies, as moss, and leaves of trees; it is called the Dropping Well. At a small distance is Hincaster, where the Romans had a camp. Within the park is Kirkshead, mentioned by Camden as a place frequented by the Romans. The gardens belonging to this seat are curious, in the old style, and said to have been planned by the gardener of James the Second, who resided here with colonel Graham, during some part of the troubles of that prince. Sizergh-hall is a venerable old building, in a pleasant situation, formed for a place of defence: it belongs to the family of Strickland. On the edge of a mountain a mile from Kendal, is a natural curiosity, called Claythorp Clints; it consists of a large plain of limestone rock, six hundred yards in length, and two hundred in breadth.

	was once a royal village, and the residence of some of the Saxon kings, of whose great buildings some ruins are yet visible. Edmund king of the West Saxons was here stabbed with a dagger, by an outlawed robber, whom he seized with his own hand, because he would not obey the officer that carried the order for him to quit the place. Here is a small church, seated on an eminence.

	Here the Roman Ikenild-street-road enters this county. It is a village washed by the Thames. The rich prospects of the windings of the Thames, and the road being skirted for several miles with lofty hills, covered with beech, render this one of the most pleasant rides in the county. 	The Grange was formerly a farm of the monastery of that name: it consists of a ruined brick house, erected on the site of a more ancient dwelling. At the east end of this house is an antique chapel, which, by the initials I. D. cut on a square stone window clock, seems as if it were built or repaired by John Draper, the prior. The roof of this chapel is handsomely arched with wood. The building itself is of stone; in it is a place for holy-water.

DUBLIN is the capital of Ireland, in the county of the same name. It is seated on the river Liffey, in view of the sea on the east. It is about two miles and a half in extent both in length and breadth. It was erected into a bishopric by William the Conqueror, in 1084; and into an archbishopric in 1152. The streets of Dublin have a near resemblance to those of London. It contains two cathedrals, eighteen parish churches, two chapels of ease, fifteen Roman-catholic chapels, thirteen meeting-houses for dissenters of various denominations three foreign churches, and a synagogue. There are several magnificent streets and squares, many of which are newly built. Among the principal public buildings are, the castle, the residence of the viceroy, which was built in 1213; Trinity college, that which was the parliament house; the royal exchange; the new custom-house; the royal hospital at Kilmainham, for invalids; and Essex-bridge, one of the five bridges over the Liffey. The harbour is choaked up with two banks of sand, which prevent vessels of large burthen from going over the bar; a defect which will be remedied, no doubt, by some fine projected improvements. It is sixty miles west of Holyhead in Wales; and three hundred and thirty north-west of London. This city returns two, and the university one member, to the united parliament.

2 DRUMCONDRA 82
 although two miles from Dublin castle, yet by the continuation of new buildings, it is now joined to it. On the l. is Belvidere, a handsome seat. On the r. is Puck's town.

3 1/4 SANTRY 80 1/4
 On the l. is Santry house and demesne, which formerly belonged to the unfortunate lord Santry, but is now the seat of Charles Doinville, esq. It is a noble edifice, with excellent gardens, and an extensive estate: the large piece of water between the house and the road, considerably adds to its beauty. Beyond on the r. are Willsborough and Clinshogh, and further, Belchamp, the right hon. J. C. Beresford. Beyond on the l. is Tamora, sir Henry Wilkinson.

7 * SWORDS 77
 Here is one of the most complete of those ancient round towers, which are almost peculiar to Ireland. Here are many ruins of ancient buildings, one of which was a palace of the archbishops of Dublin. This town was once a bishop's see, united to Lusk. This place has been the scene of many memorable events. On the r. Drinham, — Cruise, esq. and Malahide castle, — Talbot, esq. In this

9			PURVEY 75 is a small village. On the r. is an old seat of viscount Kingsland, in the hall of which are two horns of a moose deer of an enormous size.
12 $\frac{3}{4}$			MAN OF WAR 71 $\frac{1}{4}$
14 $\frac{1}{4}$			* BALRUDDERY 69 $\frac{3}{4}$ is a considerable fishing-town, standing about a mile from the sea. It is sometimes called Balrothery. On the l. Hays town, Mrs. Tighe Three miles on the l. is Gormanstown, an ancient seat of lord Gormanstown.
20 $\frac{1}{4}$			JULIAN'S TOWN, Meath 63 $\frac{3}{4}$ In 1641, an action was fought here, in which the rebels were victorious over the English troops.
23 $\frac{1}{2}$			* DROGHEDA, Louth .. 60 $\frac{1}{2}$ is a strong place, and well inhabited, having an excellent harbour. It is seated on the Boyne. It has an excellent market, plentifully supplied with provisions. Some fine ruins of abbeys are to be seen near this town. Two miles up the river an obelisk is erected, in memory of the victory obtained there by king William the Third, in 1690. At Grange, near this place, is a vaulted cave, in the form of a cross, with a gallery leading to it, of eighty feet long. Three miles beyond are the ruins of the ancient abbey of Monaster Bute, and an ancient round tower, 110 feet high. Near which is the large stone cross, called St. Boyne's cross, one of the most ancient religious reliques in Ireland. This place returns one member to the united parliament.
30 $\frac{1}{2}$			* DUNLEER 53 $\frac{1}{2}$ Its church is very ancient. On the r. two miles is Barmeath, a fine seat of sir Patrick Bellew. Here is a pair of handsome moose deer horns, and a skeleton of the head; an animal which in ancient times was not uncommon in this island.
34 $\frac{1}{4}$			CASTLE BELLINGHAM 49 $\frac{3}{4}$ is famous for ale; and here is a celebrated old spreading elm. On the l. is — Bellingham, esq.
37 $\frac{1}{4}$			* LURGAN GREEN 46 $\frac{3}{4}$ On the l. is Clermont, a fine seat of the earl of Clermont.
40 $\frac{1}{2}$			* DUNDALK 43 $\frac{1}{2}$ is a sea-port; the river of which admits vessels but of small burthen. Several branches of the cambric manufactory are carried on here. This was once a royal city. It now returns one member to the united parliament.
45 $\frac{1}{2}$			JONESBOROUGH, Armagh 38 $\frac{1}{2}$ On the r. Ravensdale park, T. J. Fortescue, esq.
50 $\frac{1}{2}$			* NEWRY, Down 33 $\frac{1}{2}$ is seated on the side of a steep hill, at the foot of which is the Newry water, having over it two stone bridges. It is now the largest town in the county, and is flourishing and populous. It returns one member to the united parliament.

 84 * ANTRIM, capital of the county. The linen is its principal manufacture. It has a stately castle, long the residence of the Skeffingtons. An action was fought here in 1798, between six thousand insurgents, and one troop of the 22d light dragoons, commanded by major Seddon, the Antrim infantry, yeomanry, and thirty-two volunteers. The action lasted in the streets from two till four in the afternoon, when the rebels were beaten off. Lord O'Neil died soon afterwards of his wounds. The waters of Lough Neagh, upon which Antrim is seated, are said to be remarkable for healing qualities.

 is on the river Lagan. The linen manufacture is carried on here to a great extent. This town, and surrounding neighbourhood, belongs to the marquis of Hertford. It sends one member to the united parliament. Five miles from it on the r. is Belvoir, a beautiful seat of viscount Dungannon.
 80 * BELFAST 8
 a sea-port, seated on Carrickfergus bay. It is one of the most flourishing commercial towns in Ire-

D. R. land. A navigable canal, the property of the marquis of Donegal, connecting the harbour with Lough-Neagh, was completed in 1793. It is a well-built town, and the inhabitants possess the spirit of enterprize in the highest degree. Their manufactures of cotton, cambrick, linen, sail-cloth, glass, and earthenware, are carried on with a spirit and to an extent not to be witnessed in any other part of Ireland. It sends one member to the united parliament. The whole town is the property of the marquis of Donegal.

32 * CARRICKFERGUS is rich and populous, with a good harbour and a castle; and is seated on the Irish Channel in a bay of the same name. Here was a monastery, founded in 1232, for franciscan friars. At the general dissolution of monasteries, this house and all its possessions were given to sir Edmund Fitzgerald, and by him assigned to sir Arthur Chichester (ancestor of the marquis of Donegal), several times lord-deputy of Ireland; who erected a noble castle on the scite of the monastery. Here king William III. landed on the 14th of June, 1690, when he came to oppose the progress of James II. It sends one member to the united parliament.

* LONDONDERRY, Derry, is a very considerable town, the capital of the county. Its fortifications are not strong, and yet it is remarkable for a long siege it sustained against king James the Second, in 1689. It is a modern place, built by a company of London adventurers, in the reign of James the First. It consists of only two streets, neat and well paved; and the houses are mostly built of freestone. At the siege, when all the commanding officers were dead, they chose Mr. Walker, a clergyman, for their head, who performed wonders by his bravery and conduct, till a naval force from England, with some troops under general Kirke, broke the boom across the harbour, and brought a seasonable relief; by which the enemy were so dispirited, as to raise the siege. This town is seated on the river Mourne, near its mouth; and has a considerable inland trade, as well as its trade to America and the West Indies. It returns one member to the united parliament.

57 OULART..... 9 $\frac{3}{4}$
On May 27, 1798, a body of insurgents was attacked by lieutenant-colonel Foote, major Lombard, and 106 of the North Cork militia, who were surrounded, and every man was killed, except the lieutenant-colonel and two privates. As the road approaches Wexford, are several good seats; among others, of — Percival, esq. and Le Hunt, esq. Wexford is entered by a ferry across the river, near half a mile broad, and discharges itself into the sea, forming a large and very commodious harbour.

66 $\frac{3}{4}$ * WEXFORD, was once reckoned the chief city in Ireland, being the first colony of the English, and is still a large handsome town, with a very commodious harbour at the mouth of the river Slaney, on a bay of St. George's Channel. The trade of this port chiefly consists of corn, a great quantity of which is malted and exported for foreign markets. On the 20th of May, 1798, this town was evacuated by the troops, twenty thousand of the rebels being ready to attack it. They kept possession of it till the 21st of June following, committing many horrid barbarities upon the innocent inhabitants. It returns one member to the united parliament.

Here are the remains of an ancient square building, called Clough. Tradition says hat it was built by king John, as a resting-place between Cork and Waterford.

110 YOUGHALL, is a small town. The collegiate church is a large and elegant structure, in which is a fine monument, now much defaced, erected by the first earl of Cork. Towards the sea, the town is defended by a small fort, with a mole for the security of shipping. Here are the ruins of two abbeys, and a little way up the river, stands the ruined castle of Rincrew, once a house of the Knights Templars. In the gardens here, it is said, the potatoe was first planted, having been introduced here by the accomplished sir Walter Raleigh; part of which estate in this place he sold to the earl of Cork. He brought them from Virginia, and highly deserves the gratitude of posterity for the introduction of so useful and wholesome a plant.

is a pleasant town, rising in manufactures. The lakes abound with various kinds of fish, but are remarkable for not producing pike.

D. R. On the 27th of August, 1798, the French, commanded by general Humbert, attacked and defeated the English troops, who were posted in front of the town. The town remained in their possession for nine days, when they marched out towards Colooney, on the arrival of the army under marquis Cornwallis.

129 CROSSMALINA 9

138 * KILLALA, is the seat of a bishop, where is the palace, and at the extremity of the town, one of the round towers peculiar to Ireland. This is a small sea-port, on the western coast of a large bay of the same name, opening into the Atlantic. Some coarse linen and woollen cloths are made here; but fishing is the chief occupation of the inhabitants. The bay and river abound with great variety of fish, and afford annually a plentiful supply of herrings. Here lived Morgan, of astonishing talents as an arithmetician. He could multiply nine figures by an equal number, without the use of pen and ink. The French, under general Humbert, landed here on the 22d of August, 1798, and after an opposition from a small party of fenibles, took the bishop, and a number of others, prisoners. On the 24th they marched towards Ballina; but finding themselves opposed, they returned to Killala, and on the 26th advanced to Castlebar. An entertaining and circumstantial account of this expedition was afterwards printed by the bishop of Killala.

To DOVER, p. 302. It is regulated, that all passengers of whatever country, with the exception of diplomatic characters and messengers, who have their choice on either side of the water, shall be conveyed in British packets from Dover to Calais, and in French packets from Calais to Dover. Packets and bye-boats sail every tide for Calais and for Boulogne, at the fare of half-a-guinea for each passenger. A whole packet may be obtained at any price between twelve and fifteen pounds. The fare from Calais has been recently reduced, and a packet usually sails for Dover every tide. Travellers may go from Calais by one diligence at 50 livres, and by the other at 49 livres, for each passenger. The diligence usually travels at the rate of four miles an hour, or it is 54 hours on the road. Three quarters of an hour are allowed for dinner. The diligence carries six inside passengers†.

is in the department of the Straits of Calais and late province of Picardy, with a citadel and a fortified harbour. It was taken by King Edward the Third, in 1347, after a memorable siege of more than eleven months, which has given rise to some historical aswell as dramatic fiction. In 1557, in the inglorious reign of queen Mary, it was taken by the duke of Guise; and has remained ever since in possession of the French. It was bombarded by the English in 1696, without receiving much injury. The fortifications are good; but its greatest strength is its situation among the marshes, which may be overflowed at the approach of an enemy. It has weathered the storm of the revolution, without witnessing a single act of bloodshed. Dessein's hotel, the usual resort of the English, is a most commodious and spacious inn; containing within itself a small theatre, a garden, public promenades, a billiard-room, and a coffee-room. Here a good chaise may be hired to go to Paris, and to return, for about twelve guineas.

The first objects that meet the eye, on entering the town, are a beautiful chateau and church, laid in ruins during the furious days of the revolution. On passing the market-place are seen the beautiful remains of the church of Notre Dame, destroyed in a similar manner. The fury of the revolution has spared nothing that had a resemblance of elegance and refinement; and seems to have waged an undistinguishing war, as well with every ancient monument of taste and magnificence, as with the rights and property of the people. It was taken by the Spaniards, by a stratagem, in 1597, and retaken by Henry the Fourth, who built a citadel here. It has manufactures in linen and woollen cloth, established by Colbert, which employ in the city and adjacent country above 30,000 people. Many Roman antiquities have been found in the neighbourhood, and there are some mineral springs. It has manufactures of ratteens, druggets, serges, and leather. It was the birth-place of the celebrated Paschal. The country now begins to be very beautiful. Near Clermont was the chateau and domain of the duke de Fitzjames, who, during the revolution, has been an emigrant; but has been permitted to return, and to take possession of that part of his property which remained unsold; and which, out of a most extensive estate, is reduced to a miserable pittance. The river Seine, which crosses it, forms two small islands; one of which, now called l'Isle Notre Dame, or the city, formed the entire town of Lutetia, when it was conquered by Julius Cæsar. The number of inhabitants is computed to be about eight hundred thousand. It is six leagues in circumference, including the suburbs. The rivers Yonne, Marne, and Oise, by their junction with the Seine, convey to Paris the commodities of the late provinces of Burgundy, Champagne, and Picardy; and the Seine supplies it with the riches of the late province of Normandy, and of the sea, which is forty two leagues from it. The first novelty to a stranger is that of the pavement, as there is no footway, and the carriages driving close to the houses, to the inconvenience and danger of the passengers. 	The public buildings are handsome. There are many fine squares. The Place de la Révolution was the fatal scene of the execution of the unfortunate Louis the Sixteenth, and of his unhappy consort, Maria Antoinette; the former on the 21st of January, and the latter on the 16th of October, 1793. The most interesting of the manufactories of Paris is that of the Gobelins (so called from a family of celebrated dyers, settled in this city in 1450), in which tapestries are made after the pictures of the greatest masters, to such perfection, that a whole length of Louis the Fifteenth, framed, and placed among the masterpieces of painting, was taken, for many days, by multitudes of visitors, for a finished piece. The manufactory of plate-glass, also, merits attention. The cathedral of Notre Dame, a Gothic structure, is one of the largest in Europe, and contains forty-five chapels. The four principal palaces are, the Louvre; the Tuilleries, now le Palais National; the Palais Royal, now le Palais d'Egalité; and the Luxembourg. In the Louvre is a grand assemblage of all that is most exquisite in the fine arts. But it is not within the compass of our plan to give an historical and copious detail of all that is worthy the attention of the enquiring traveller.		Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

It is one of the most beautiful seats in France, as well on account of the apartments and gardens, as of the fine forest that is near it. Here king James the Second found an asylum, when he abdicated his throne, and fled to France. It is eight English miles distant from Versailles, and many English families resided here before the revolution.

KEARSLEY'S ORNAMENTED EDITION

Is now publishing—One Play every Fortnight,
HANDSOMELY PRINTED IN SMALL OCTAVO, ON A SUPERFINE FOOLSCAP PAPER, AND HOT-PRESSED,

Each Play embellished with Two Designs

ROYAL ACADEMICIANS;

AND OF

MESSRS. THURSTON, BURNEY, ETC.

WITH

PORTRAITS OF THE MOST DISTINGUISHED ACTORS

Occasionally introduced from the Pencil of

Mr. DE WILDE;

And engraved in a very superior Style of Elegance and Beauty, by

ANGUS,	DELATRE,	PARKER,	SKELTON,
ARMSTRONG,	MILTON,	RAIMBACH,	AND
BROMLEY,	NEAGLE,	A. SMITH, A. R. A.	WARREN.

The Price is Three Shillings each Play. A few Copies on large Paper with Proof Impressions of the Plates, at Six Shillings.

The Text is corrected by the last Edition of Dr. JOHNSON and Mr. STEEVENS and at the End of each Play is introduced a Selection of their Notes; as well as those of other Commentators, independent of verbal Criticism, illustrative of the Text, the Manners and Customs of the Age in which the Poet lived,

BY MANLEY WOOD, A. M.

Late of Exeter College, Oxon.

When the Whole of the Plays are published, one or two Numbers will be devoted to the Life of Shakspeare, with a fine Portrait from the most authentic Picture; the Preface of Dr. JOHNSON; and other Preliminary Matter, desirable in a Complete Edition of the Dramatic Works of our immortal Bard.

LONDON: Printed for G. KEARSLEY, Fleet-street.

* * * Orders are received by all the Booksellers in the United Kingdom, where likewise Specimens of the Plates may be seen.

T. Davison, Whitefriars.]
